U.K. REJECTS HANGMAN

LONDON (UPI) — The House of Commons today rejected decisively a bid to bring back hanging in Britian three years after it was abolished.

It did so by a vote of 320-178, defeating a private bill submitted by Edward Taylor, a Conservative party backbencher.

Both the government and the opposition Labor Party allowed their supporters to vote freely according to their consciences without party discipline.

But Prime Minister Edward Heath, a strong opponent of hanging, led opponents of hanging into the lobby to vote against it.

Taylor's bill called for restoration of the death penalty for murderers of policemen or prison warders while in the exercise of their duty or for murders involving explosives or firearms.

"There can be no reasonable doubt that violence and killings have increased," Taylor said. "But the real issue is not whether there has been an increase in violence but whether any connection can be established between this and the decision to abolish capital punishment."

Taylor said the purpose of the bill was "to strike terror into the hearts of criminals in possession of guns and of terrorists who contemplated murder by explosives."

But Roy Jenkins, a former Labor Party home secretary, said, "The bill would be ineffective, impracticable and wrong."

Supplies Reach Blockaded City

Times-News Services

PHNOM PENH — A 387-vehicle convoy broke through the Communist blockade today, bringing the first supplies in 20 days to this beleaguered city.

In Vietnam, Communists launched three sharp attacks in the Mekong Delta southwest of Saigon today, and U.S. officials said that in the north the North Vietnamese had virtually annexed the region south of the demilitarized zone with a string of air defence weapons.

The supply convoy arrived in Phnom Penh shortly after the United States started an airlift of fuel into the Cambodia capital, and started speculation that their airlift will be cancelled.

The convoy carried desperately needed supplies of food, salt, lumber, cement and heavy machinery and arrived without serious incident under heavy U.S. air cover.

The Berlin-style airlift of petroleum products was announced in the midst of the biggest Communist offensive ever launched in Cambodia. The offensive now in its third month, virtually severed all major supply lines feeding the capital, causing serious shortages of many basic necessities throughout the capital.

Communist gunners along the Mekong River had delayed or halted supply convoys moving along that route despite heavy U.S. air cover.

The most serious shortages are of petroleum products and all the city's gas stations have completely depleted their stocks despite strict government rationing. The petroleum shortage has caused power supply problems and most of the capital lives in a 24-hour power blackout.

Since the capital's water supply depends upon electric pumps, many areas have been without water for nearly one week causing severe problems now that the temperature averages 95 degrees.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Defence Secretary Elliot Richardson said that the flow of Soviet and Chinese arms through North Vietnam will determine in large part how long fighting continues in Cambodia.

"I think that the key to the situation may very well lie there," Richardson said. The Russians and Chinese "could unquestionably exercise influence" over the amount of weapons that reach Cambodia through North Vietnam.

In Vietnam, a U.S. state department official said Hanoi probably will try to achieve its objectives in Indochina by political rather than military means, despite mounting ceasefire violations.

The situation at the surrounded government border ranger camp at Ton Le Chan, 50 miles north of Saigon, where Communist shellings have been an almost daily occurrence since the end of February, was reported unchanged today.

Firm Admits Subdivision Problems

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE
Times Staff

NORTH COWICHAN — Kingsview Properties Ltd. admitted Tuesday it should have consulted the public six months ago on its controversial housing subdivision here.

The firm also said the proposed subdivision could displace wildlife, pollute nearby well water, cause erosion and create traffic problems.

These conclusions were offered at a special briefing two days in advance of a public hearing which may decide the fate of the proposed development. Most of the company's owners were on hand.

The briefing, combined with a reception and buffet luncheon at the Quamichan Inn, was laid on for the press. A helicopter was also brought in from Victoria to give reporters a view of the 505-acre subdivision site on the north side of Tzouhalem Mountain.

One month ago, North Cowichan citizens crowded a public hearing and turned it into a noisy and almost unanimous protest against the development plans.

A land-use contract which serves as a zoning bylaw is at issue in the Kingsview controversy. The public hearing heard complaints that the contract was merely a licence to develop without interference for 10 years.

One of the contract's parts, a drawing of the 1,300-lot subdivision, was ridiculed as being a fraud because no land registry would accept it as a plan.

Dick Wright, an employee of B. White and Associates, said the plan could not be registered until the surveying pins are in place throughout the subdivision.

Coming up with a registerable plan before the survey would be "putting the cart before the horse," he said.

The bleakest report read at the briefing came from ecologist Murray Galbraith of Victoria. Assuming that new roads and roofs covering 15 per cent of the site will form surfaces impervious to rainwater, the "rate of erosion in streams may be increased."

This drainage water only makes up 1.7 per cent of the whole drainage to Lake Quamichan, but it will "contain pollutants in more variety and concentration than are presently found within the basin. At least two wells which are located at stream side and used for drinking and stock watering could be contaminated."

Galbraith said it is probable that "the only solution would be switching to the municipal supply" of water.

Galbraith noted that facilities will be designed to control pollution of this kind.

"The present best estimate is that up to a dozen deer utilize the developmnt area, with ring-necked pheasant, California quail and other

QUEBEC AREA EVACUATED

PAPINEAUVILLE, Que. (CP) — A square-mile area on the outskirts of this community, 45 miles east of Ottawa, was evacuated today after a CP Rail freight train derailed and caught fire after a collision with a truck.

An early report said several crew members were feared trapped in the wreckage but a provincial police spokesman said later all were safe. One trainman suffered minor injuries and was taken to hospital at nearby Buckingham but no others were reported hurt.

Firemen from four area departments rushed to the scene to battle flames which broke out in a number of derailed oil cars and spread to a nearby home but the main concern was a derailed chlorine tanker.

Price Board Slated

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers Affairs Minister Herb Gray told the Commons there is a need for a food prices review board, but did not specify how it would operate.

Particulars would be contained in legislation or a detailed statement, likely to be announced before the end of the month, he said.

The 25-member all-party committee released a report last week calling for a board to review food prices. It did not say the board should be empowered to act independently, but suggested it make recommendations to Gray.

The 10 Conservatives on the committee have refused to be associated with the report and Tuesday charged it was yet another coalition effort of the Liberals and the NDP.

However, Grace MacInnis said her party will not be satisfied with a "toothless wonder" such as the now defunct prices and incomes commission.

She said the board must commend steps to ensure food prices do not increase, or even ask the government to roll back prices.

In Montreal, Steinberg's Foods Ltd., Quebec's largest food chain, dropped prices on popular steaks, roasts and ground beef an average of six cents a pound.

The move followed similar action by Marche Union Inc., which operates 23 stores.

Other food chains said they would study the situation before making reductions.

Shifting Wind Switches Flood

Times News Services

Shifting winds Tuesday night brought more devastation to southwestern Ontario and Essex County.

This time flooding struck the Lake St. Clair area and the county's north shore, already badly damaged in St. Patrick's Day flooding in March.

In the U.S. an early-spring storm that paralysed parts of the midwest churned across the northeast today bringing heavy snow and freezing temperatures.

Earlier this week, the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores of Essex County were devastated by howling easterly winds up to 50 miles an hour that hurled water seven feet high against homes, cottages, docks and farmlands.

Tuesday night it was the turn of lakefront property owners who live on the county's Lake St. Clair shore.

Winds from the northwest, gusting up to 25 miles an hour, whipped up five-foot waves and sent them over the shoreline and man-made barricades.

Parts of some communities on the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores were still under water late Tuesday in the aftermath of a wild storm Monday.

In the U.S., freeze or frost warnings were extended from Missouri and Illinois into the Ohio Valley and to the states along the Gulf of Mexico. Only Florida was expected to be spared. Birmingham, Ala., reported a record April 10 low of 31 degrees.

Heavy-snow warnings were posted for parts of Maine, where five inches already have hit Rumford. Greenville and Houlton had four inches.

NEWS BRIEFS

Dockers Protest

PORTLAND, Ore. (CP) — Dockworkers in Seattle and Tacoma began a 24-hour work stoppage today to protest an International Woodworkers of America proposal to ban the export of logs from Canada and the U.S. for six months. Thousands more dockworkers in Washington and Oregon are expected to join the protest.

Guerrilla Hunt

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Soldiers armed with machine guns patrolled the streets of Buenos Aires today, stopping cars and searching pedestrians in what government sources called "a vast governmental offensive" against guerrilla violence.

Tax Evasion $1.5M

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financier Edward Krock of Brookfield, Mass., was accused by a federal grand jury today of evading United States personal income taxes totalling almost $1.5 million, the justice department said.

Cyprus Not Hazard

OTTAWA (CP) — Growing unrest in the Greek community on Cyprus is not expected to have much effect on Canadian forces personnel involved in the peacekeeping role there, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons Tuesday.

Snow Batters Italy

ROME (AP) — Snowstorms battered the spine of the Italian peninsula to the south of Naples today and heavy rains touched off dozens of landslides knocking down houses and cutting the flow of several rivers.

U.S. MAY LIFT GAS CURBS

WASHINGTON (WP) — The chairman of the U.S. Federal Power Commission Tuesday proposed the elimination of federal controls over natural gas prices, a regulatory function that has been the province of the federal government since 1938.

FPC chairman John N. Nassikas' suggestion has the full support of President Nixon, who will deliver an energy message to Congress next week.

Nassikas said that deregulation would remove the price constraints he said were partly responsible for the chronic shortage of natural gas in the United States and for the lag in drilling for new natural gas that worsens the shortage. He implied that higher prices would drive many industrial customers away from gas to other fuels and would stimulate exploration for new gas.

Power Cutback

SPOKANE (AP) — Kaiser Aluminum began shutting down a potline at its Mead reduction works near here Tuesday in anticipation of power cutbacks.

Kaiser officials said about 70 workers will be laid off today because of the shutdown. The Bonneville Power Administration was to reduce power to the Kaiser plant by 40 per cent.

The spokesman added the present power situation "makes it almost a certainty that we won't be able to open an eighth potline May 1 as scheduled. If the situation deteriorates further, additional shutdowns and further layoffs may be necesary."

Gov't Deceit Charged

Students demonstrated in the streets of Beirut against the government and the U.S. saying failure to repulse the Israeli raids made Tuesday a "day of shame."

In a statement issued in Beirut, the National and Progressive Party Front said the Lebanese government deceived the commando leadership about its defence preparations and cut the telephone lines to all commando headquarters Monday night.

The statement also said that the Lebanese government forcibly prevented commandos from pursuing the Israeli raiders as they withdrew after their assaults on commando targets in the cities of Beirut and Sidon.

The front said that Israeli subversive units were in Lebanon for some days before the raids.

The front statement said that since last September the Lebanese authorities have tightened restrictions on the Palestine commandos, "denying them the right to self-defence."

Security forces in armored cars, on foot and wielding batons dispersed 500 demonstrating students trying to reach the United States embassy today to protest Israel's surprise raid on Lebanon.

The students, who had been marching in the streets since early morning, scattered into side streets to regroup.

Scallen, right, after verdict

Scallen 'Guilty'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Scallen, president of the Minneapolis-based Medical Investment Corp. (Medicor), was found guilty Tuesday in British Columbia Supreme Court of theft of $3 million by illegally converting money belonging to Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd. to the use of Medicor.

The jury, after deliberating for 15 hours over two days, also found Scallen guilty of making a false prospectus with the intent of inducing the public to purchase shares in Northwest Sports, parent company of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League.

Sentence is to be handed down Friday by Mr. Justice Harry McKay.

Scallen, remanded in custory, appeared as if he might break down after the jurors gave their verdict.

Scallen and Lyman Walters, vice president of Medicor and Northwest Sports, were both charged with theft and issuing a false prospectus Feb. 22, 1972, after a B.C. Securities Commission investigation.

OIL SPILL AT COLWOOD

Between 4,000 to 5,000 gallons of fuel oil were spilled into the water at the armed forces' Colwood refuelling jetty at 8:15 a.m. today.

By noon today, all but about 2,000 gallons had been "returned to the system through quick action on the part of the armed forces' personnel," he said.

The remainder was contained by booms and a slick-licker was being called in to clean up the spill.

Car Makers Get Reprieve

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) today granted the U.S. auto industry a one-year delay in meeting the 1975 anti-pollution standards.

But the agency set strict interim pollution standards and ordered the industry to equip all cars sold in California in 1975 with pollution control devices.

The industry had urged the EPA to allow it to use California, a state with a serious pollution problem, as a testing ground for its pollution control devices, known as catalytic converters.

EPA administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said he chose to phase in the pollution control devices to prevent disruption in the auto industry.

The major U.S. manufacturers — General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and American Motors — claimed in testimony before the EPA last month that they could not meet the standards. Without the one-year delay, the industry argued, it might be forced to foist an expensive and untested pollution control device on the car-buying public.

The delay means that automakers now will be required to cut carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon exhaust on 1976 model cars — instead of 1975 models — to 90 per cent below those of 1970 models.

Environmentalists said the delay was a major setback for the clean air campaign because the nation's congested cities are depending on reduced auto pollution to meet the requirements of the clean air act. If cars continue to pollute,

Sikkim's Troubles Inspired by India

By BERNARD NOSSITER

LONDON (WP) — A telephone interview with the Sikkimese royal family in Gangtok's, taped here, suggests that India has exploited Sikkim's troubles to take over the Himalayan kingdom.

Neither the king, Chogyal Palden Thondup Namgyal, nor his crown prince, Tenzing Namgyal, would say flatly that India had inspired their difficulties. With the Indian army at their doorstep, both chose their words carefully.

But Prince Tenzing did say this:

"Everything is going reasonably well — it is just that, you know, the element outside us has been causing some problems, and that we have several times been approached by the political officer to hand over all power to the government of . . ."

On this last world, the telephone line, which had been remarkable clear, suddenly went dead for an instant, obliterating the identity of the government. Himalayan experts, however, said there was little doubt that Prince Tenzing was referring to New Delhi's political officer and the government of India.

In the course of the half-hour discussion, the Chogyal reluctantly acknowledged that he had asked the Indian army to intervene. But almost in the next breath, he talked of "outside elements" causing violence and cited protests in Darjeeling. Darjeeling is in the Indian state of West Bengal.

Both royal figures said on Saturday afternoon London time, that they were in control, if not in full control. The Chogyal, who is married to the American Hope Cooke, predicted that he would have full control in 24 or 48 hours.

But the next day, Sunday, India took over administration of the tiny kingdom, saying it had done so "in the interests of law and order, at the request of the Chogyal."

India's interest in Sikkim is not new. New Delhi took advantage of a 1949 uprising to send in troops and establish a protectorate over the kingdom. Since then, India has run Sikkim's defence, foreign affairs and communications.

Sikkim lies across an historic invasion route between China and India. Troops from both armies have fired at each other across Himalayan passes nearly 20,000 feet up.

The Chogyal's removal last May of India's chief administrator, and Chinese hints that Peking wants less hostile relations with India, may have encouraged New Delhi to seize firmer control of the little land.

Impartial accounts of the events in Sikkim are hard to come by. India has refused to permit any foreign correspondents to enter the kingdom since the disturbances began last week.

Another attempt was made to reach them on Sunday, but the Indian-controlled communications to the palace were cut off.

Prince Tenzing began by outlining the background of the disturbances. A mob of about 4,000, armed with clubs, he said, had stormed Gangtok to demand "certain rights." According to the prince, many of them had been forced to demonstrate by a "hard core" who had threatened them with knives.

Since the demonstrators are Nepalese Hindus and the royal family are Tibetan Buddhists, the All India Radio story whipped up communal antagonism. The prince's account was an effort to allay these passions.

Prince Tenzing acknowledged that the demonstrators were led by two Sikkimese parties of Nepalese — the National Congress and the Janata Congress — who were counted out in Sikkim's general election in January. He did not specify the "rights" they sought, but it is known that the Nepalese, a majority, believe they have been underrepresented and victimized by false electoral counts in Sikkim.

Next, the Chogyal himself came on the line. "We have had to hand over a certain amount of law and order problems to the Indian army, or rather the government of India," he said.

The prince then took back the telephone. He spoke of "the outside element" and made his mention of the government's demand for full power, with the name of the government inaudible.

"We are in control," he said. "You see the whole reason why there has been no bloodshed, why the crowd has been allowed to come to Gangtok, has been that my father does not want any violence whatsoever.

"Everything is going reasonably well," the prince said. The next day, India took command.

Monday night, the Chogyal's sister, Princess Tsedeun Yapshipheunkhang, said that the Sikkimese government has documents indicating that India's civilian intelligence service financed the leaders of both dissenting Nepalese parties.

game birds inhabiting the limited field area," the report says. "These species will be displaced and reduced in number."

". . . field inspection and interview with local residents indicates that the east side streams are not utilized by spawning cutthroat and rainbow trout. However, this possibility is not as yet eliminated."

"Despite the existence of problems noted," the report continues, "steep gradient, northwesterly aspect and thin soils make the site more desirable for housing development than productive bottom lands." The bottom lands lie across Maple Bay road next to Lake Quamichan where smaller subdivisions have begun to appear.

MONITOR

Galbraith concluded by saying that two engineering firms will be hired to monitor and control pollution generated from the site.

Another report, by N. D. Lea and Associates, says the development should have one more access road than provided now by Maple Bay Road.

The traffic engineers estimated a threefold increase in the traffic using Maple Bay Road at present, bringing the use of the road to its "design volume" although not to over-capacity.

But "it is suggested that more than one access road would be provided to this development and that the intersection designs should receive careful consideration."

PAINS TO EXPLAIN

Wilkinson took pains to explain that all but one of the owners involved are native British Columbians.

Another owner, George Treit, said the two main concepts in the subdivision are to take advantage of the view from the properties, and to keep the lot sizes large — the average would be 11,000 square feet.

"We want to create a British Properties (a West Vancouver development) with trees."

The briefing was told that company officers have plenty of experience in building subdivisions on mountainous grades.

Answering questions later, Wilkinson said many of the statements heard opposing the development were "inflammatory" and made "by people who are irresponsible."

The public hearing is set for 7 p.m. Thursday at North Cowichan Senior High School.

U.S. automakers have concentrated on the catalytic converter, a manifold-like device, to extract carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons from lead-free gasolines. But the industry told the EPA the device still is not completely dependable for 50,000 miles as required by law.

The automakers argued that both they and the public would suffer if they were compelled to equip 1975 models with catalytic converters that were not fully tested.

Ruckelshaus said he was setting strict interim pollution standards for the rest of the nation.

He singled out Chrysler Motors for sharp criticism on whether it made a "good-faith effort to meet the standard."

"If Congress had provided me with some sanctions short of the nuclear deterrent of, in effect, closing down the major corporation, my finding on good faith may have been otherwise," he said.

In his attack, Nader said that "once again the concessionaires within the Nixon administration have sold out the environment and health of Americans to the auto industry."

Ruckelshaus "capitulated to the auto industry plain and simple," Nader charged. "It is clear that White House pressure on Ruckelshaus has been an important factor in his raising up the white flag to the auto industry."

Nader suggested that the requirement might not even be enforced for 1976 models. By granting the industry request for delay now, Nader said the EPA not only surrendered for 1975 "but also laid the basis" for delaying it for 1976.

Two Japanese manufacturers, Honda and Mazda, told EPA they were able to meet the standards by using new and more efficient types of engines, and the Mercedes-Benz Company of West Germany also claimed one of its models, with a modified diesel engine, could meet the 1975 standard.

General Motors said today it was "disappointed and dismayed" by the one-year delay.

"While the 1975 standards, as originally established, have been delayed for a year, the interim standards will be most difficult to attain and may well require the use of catalytic converters nationally," GM Board Chairman Richard Gerstenberg said in a statement.

POLICE SHOT OWN MEN

WASHINGTON (UPI) New Orleans police superintendent Clarence Giarrusso disclosed Tuesday that six policemen wounded in the January gun battle at the Howard Johnson's motel were shot by police.

Giarrusso said, however, that all nine person killed, and nine others wounded, were shot by Mark Essex, the sniper slain by police on the rooftop of the New Orleans motel.

Bormann's skull, and how he looked in 1943

West Germans Close Books on Bormann

Times News Services

FRANKFURT — The West German government officially closed its books on Martin Bormann today when investigators ruled that a skeleton recently unearthed was "with certainty" the remains of Hitler's long-missing deputy.

"Martin Bormann died on May 2, 1945, between 1 and 3 a.m. on the Invalidenstrasse railroad bridge in Berlin a short time after his accomplice Adolf Hitler," Frankfurt Attorney-General Horst Gauf said.

Assistant Prosecutor Joachim Richter of Hesse State, in charge of the Bormann file, confirmed that a skull and bones found last December on Berlin's Lehrter Railway yard were those of Bormann. He said remnants of a poison capsule were found in the teeth of the skull.

It was an official end to a case that sent investigators many times to South America to track down reports Bormann had escaped there with other Nazis, but there still were some skeptics — including Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal, who heads the Jewish Documentation Centre in Vienna.

"I still have some doubts," Wiesenthal told reporters at the news conference. "But I'm sure the officials here conducted their investigation with great seriousness."

Bormann killed himself when he failed to break through Russian lines surrounding Berlin, shortly before dawn on May 2, 1945, said Gauf, who had been investigating the case for 12 years.

Gauf said Bormann died sometime between 1 a.m. and 3 a.m. on a bridge over the Invalidenstrasse in Berlin's Tiergarten.

Baker Says Labor Forced Contract End

In a letter to MLAs, Mitlewski said he was selling $1,500 worth of doughnuts a month to the ferry service but claimed he lost his business because his employees are members of the Christian Labor Association of Canada.

He said the government "knuckled under" to pressure from the B.C. Federation of Labor, an opponent of CLAC, and didn't renew his contract.

Highways Minister Robert Strachan said Tuesday there was a possibility of a labor dispute arising "and this was one factor in our decision to supply our own doughnuts . . . it was to avoid controversy, that's all."

He said the ferry service could supply its own doughnuts cheaper than Mitlewski and the contract which expired March 31 was simply not renewed.

Pressure Ottawa —MLAs

Any advertising ban on cigarettes and alcohol would be ineffectual unless it is done by the federal government, the legislature's special committee on social welfare and education agreed today.

B.C. should put pressure on the federal government to implement a nation-wide ban on such advertising and ask the other provinces to support the pressure play, the committee decided.

MLA Dr. G. Scott Wallace (PC — Oak Bay) said "for some reason the federal government changed their mind before adopting the ban ... they stopped short.

The committee was discussing a report on the effects of alcohol and tobacco advertising to be presented in the legislature in the near future.

Next in the priority line was a recommendation by committee chairman Rosemary Brown (NDP — Vancouver-Burrard) to levy a "social responsibility tax."

Revenue from the tax to be levied on the advertising budgets of major cigarette and alcohol producing companies would be used for a province-wide education program and anti-cigarette and alcohol advertising.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly stressed the need for professional anti-smoking advertising, "because if it's done by churches or schools it seems too goody-goody."

Rehabilitation minister Norman Levi suggested a ban on associations between healthy sports events and cigarette and liquor companies.

The committee agreed they were willing to let companies sponsor the events if the arrangements remained on a non-advertising basis.

Saanich Lots Freed

Moderately-priced residential lots in mid-Saanich may be ready for sale by January, 1974, following a thaw this week in the provincial government's land freeze of last December.

About 40 acres of land off Roy Road being assembled by Saanich was released from the restriction imposed while new land legislation was being considered, aimed mainly at preventing the loss of agricultural uses.

Saanich assistant planner Gil Laurenson guessed the assembly project — part of an eventual 100 acres planned for moderate income private developers — could be ready for sale at cost in about 10 months.

It is the first project of this magnitude on southern Vancouver Island and it has the co-operation of both senior governments, which will share in assembly and servicing costs.

Provision for local land assembly of this type is made in the National Housing Act, and costs of presenting parcels ready for building lots are shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent provincial.

Laurenson noted the project had "been long in assembly and we want to get on with it."

When it appeared the land freeze was not about to be removed as a matter of course from the marginal land being assembled by Saanich, council appealed to Lands and Forests Minister Robert Williams and the cabinet's land use committee, stressing the need for lots at prices middle income earners could afford.

The committee granted exemption on Monday.

New Protestant Group Surfaces in N. Ireland

BELFAST (AP) — A new militant Protestant organization emerged in Northern Ireland today.

Calling itself Tara — the name of the ancient seat of the kings of Ireland — the group said it had been working secretly underground for several years and that its leaders command a widespread network.

A proclamation circulated throughout Northern Ireland said the warfare that has claimed 770 lives in the last four years was "the biginning of the final chapter of an age-long campaign to subjugate and subdue the Protestant people of Ireland."

The group demanded the Roman Catholic Church be declared an illegal organization in Ulster "because for generations this evil thing has blighted our land."

It declared: "Conflict is inevitable. We would not choose this path. But the forces of Romanism and Communism will."

There was no identification of personalities connected with the organization. Nor was there any indication of the size of Tara's following.

A sniper in Londonderry shot a British soldier while a part-time militiaman was killed in a Belfast barracks mishap by a friend cleaning his rifle.

Bombs and bullets wounded several others Tuesday night.

U.S. 'Taking Our Fish'

American visitors are not paying their fair share for fishing in Canadian waters, Jack Svoboda Sr., told the standing committee on forestry and fisheries today.

Svoboda, a Tofino commercial fisherman, said U.S. visitors make use of provincial campsites, marine parks, and as well, take home fish.

"Canadian fishermen are crowded out of their own boats and docks," he said.

"These facilities were paid for by Canadian taxpayers and are for use by Canadians," he said, "but we are being crowded out by visitors."

After the standing committee had adjourned, Svoboda said Oregon is facing the same problem with Californians who take up a large part of the state's recreational facilities.

Oregon has come to the conclusion that they do not gain economically from these visitors.

Buick's new Apollo

Apollo 2-door Coupe
Also available: Hatchback Coupe and 4-door Sedan

GM Canada

Buick introduces its new small car. Apollo . . . the luxury compact. The difference between Apollo and the other compacts is really quite simple. Apollo is a Buick.

If you've long admired Buick's luxurious interiors, you'll find the same careful attention to details in Apollo's upholstery and trim.

If you've come to respect Buicks for their smooth, effortless performance, you'll be pleased to know that Apollo's optional 350 CID V8 engine is the same power plant that goes into the full-size LeSabre series.

Perhaps Buick's famed ride has a special attraction for you. Apollo won't let you down. The suspension springs are computer-selected, just like in the full-size Buicks.

Apollo differs from the other compacts in many more ways. For instance, when equipped with the optional V8 engine, Apollo weighs up to 490 pounds more than other compacts. That's 490 extra pounds of road-holding heft.

And Apollo has more sound-absorbing materials in the body than most other compacts. So you can be assured that your Apollo will ride Buick quiet.

Discover the difference between Buick Apollo and the other small cars for yourself.

Action on Wilderness Parks

The provincial government's move to establish ten sizable new parks and extend the boundaries of another is a commendable effort to safeguard more wilderness areas in British Columbia for the recreational needs of the people. Plans for the areas in question have not been produced on the spur of the moment. They have in general been prepared by the provincial parks experts over the years, but rejected by the Social Credit government.

The latter was active in providing small camping parks — and this was all to the good. But it failed to recognize its responsibility to set aside larger wilderness areas as well. It became notorious, in fact, for readjusting boundaries to the detriment of the parks, and for permitting industrial intrusions into areas already reserved, in theory, only for recreation.

The new legislation should meet these problems in some important regards. Park boundaries, for instance, will be altered — except for enlargements — only by the Legislature, rather than by the cabinet, and this will permit full discussion and publicity. The dubious bargains in "trades" of park assets which marked the past 20 years should become impossible.

Some of the new parklands — and they will add about 25 per cent to the existing total of provincial park acreage — are little known by the general public, but include excellent sea frontage as well as mountain areas. The Cape Scott park, at the northern tip of Vancouver Island, one of the smallest at 58 square miles, should prove a valuable asset in the years to come. It should be understood that these are wilderness parks, rather than roadside camping areas, and will not be as easily accessible as the latter. It is this factor, in truth, which will help to preserve them in their natural state, for too heavy a traffic of visitors could soon destroy many of the features it is desired to preserve.

In conjunction with the national parks in British Columbia and on the Alberta border, the provincial system should provide a good foundation of wilderness areas not only for the present generation but also for the future. It is these areas which may be our only bequest to posterity that will show the land "as it used to be." As trustees of the earth, mankind has not been particularly far-seeing in ensuring the future of its heritage. The present acquisitions by the parks system should be recognized as making up lost ground of the past two decades, and not as the final word in parks assembly in this province.

Fish for Whoever Catches Them

The concern of Washington state fisheries officials over the small return of spring salmon to Puget Sound — a situation which the Americans attribute to heavy fishing by Canadians before the fish can make their way back to their natal river — recalls a philosophy general among fishermen of all nations. It can be bluntly stated: What's yours is ours, when we can catch them; what's ours is our own.

On their migration from spawning streams running into Puget Sound, the springs — or chinooks as the Americans call them — make their way north and split to follow two main routes. One moves directly north through the Gulf of Georgia and thence up the Inside Passage between Vancouver Island and the Mainland. The other swings west through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and then north, paralleling the Island's West Coast. Returning through the same waters as mature fish, they are subject to intensive catches by Canadians while still off the Vancouver Island coasts.

Washington spokesmen quote statistics from Canadian biologists to indicate that in some cases 80 to 85 per cent of the Canadian catch originated in the United States.

As a consequence of the limited return of these salmon to their original streams to spawn, consideration is being given this year to a severe limitation of the American catch of Puget Sound species, both for sports anglers and commercial fishermen.

The position of the American fishermen is not dissimilar to that of Canadians who object to the catch by United States boats, or other foreign fishermen of Fraser River salmon in Queen Charlotte Sound and in the vicinity of Dixon Entrance.

The Canadians go further in their protest. They call for curtailment of foreign fishing for species other than salmon — the ground fish taken by the big Russian and Japanese fleets — holding that the method of fishing as well as the disruption of the underwater ecology threatens the health of the runs. These are our fish, argue the Canadians, since they emerged from rivers flowing into the Pacific from British Columbia headwaters without passing through any other country.

The fish, low on nationalistic sentiment, continue to wander from one jurisdiction to another, subject to the harvest of whatever boats can take them.

If the runs are not to suffer disastrous depletion, better international controls obviously must be established. Without them, the future, under present methods of catching, could be dim for all fishermen.

An interesting point in ethics has been raised for Oak Bay Council's finance committee.

An Oak Bay High School student, who informed the authorities that he had knocked down a stop sign last December, was charged $26.76 for the damage and bills were presented four times.

The mother of the student protested, contending that the charge would not encourage students to be honest. The committee capitulated, reducing the bill to $6. — In Oak Bay, on the basis of this decision, honesty is worth $20.76 — and is negotiable.

Why the Figures Don't Agree

WASHINGTON — Concern is growing both in Congress and among the United States' chief trading partners that, when Congress considers the Nixon trade bill on the basis of trade statistics, the legislators will be comparing apples and oranges.

Discrepancies in trade statistics long have been a minor annoyance to international trade observers. The fact that the United States does not agree with any of its major trading partners on precisely how large the 1972 trade deficit is (or if a deficit exists) poses a distinct barrier to planned international trade negotiations and to the entire problem of balance of payments.

The U.S. trade balance with Canada for 1972, for example, which heads the list of trading partners and is the only major partner which collects its trade data on an FOB (freight on board) basis is listed in U.S. data as a $2.5 billion deficit. The Canadian figures, however, show a $1.5 billion deficit.

Figures for 1971 with Japan, the second U.S. trading partner, show a deficit of $3.2 billion according to U.S. figures, but $2.4 billion by Japanese statistics.

For all countries which have more than $1 billion in trade with the United States, the 1971 total by U.S. figures adds up to a $1.68 billion deficit. But according to the figures of trading partners, a $146 million surplus existed for the United States.

Deeply Frightening

Sir Christopher Soames, the European Economic Community's (EEC) vice president for external relations, complained on a recent visit to Washington that no trade figures were in agreement. A West German official termed the lack of co-ordination between the United States and Europe on trade and monetary matters "deeply frightening."

He feared, he added, that "a trade controversy could arise which could have broad applications in other areas" because of the lack of agreement on statistics and other trade data.

Several Congressmen agree, Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D—N.Y.), who conducted recent hearings on international trade for the Senate Finance Committee, queried the general accounting office about a $1 billion discrepancy in Department of Commerce figures.

Commerce statistics on U.S. automotive trade with Canada for 1971 indicated a $1.2 billion deficit; tariff commission figures based on official commerce data indicated a deficit of $1.4 billion; another table showed a net deficit of only $197 million.

"Merely to state that exports are understated while imports are overstated, with a difference amounting to over $1 billion," said Ribicoff's letter to the GAO, "leaves many questions unanswered."

"A few million dollars could make a lot of difference in how we look at things," Ribicoff said later. "We ought to know what the figures are before we take action. Unless we have accurate trade figures, how are we going to negotiate with our trading partners?"

Admittedly, economists who deal with international trade insist that the discrepancies do not create insoluble situations.

The differences, said Edward M. Bernstein, international economist and monetary adviser, are not so important, "strictly speaking." It is important, however, "when talking about specific commodities," he added, "and the figures affect the attitudes of trade union and trade negotiators."

"In terms of negotiations," said Mary Jane Wignot, international economist in the office of President Nixon's special representative for trade negotiations, "it is a problem, but I wouldn't say it's an explosive issue. We inflate trade figures

SIR CHRISTOPHER SOAMES
. . . common complaint

As Miss Wignot implied, the major statistical differences occur because the United States compiles its figures according to FOB methodology, while most other major trading nations gather their trade data in CIF terms.

There are other margins for differences:

—Differing classifications or categories. West Germany, for example, counts military imports from the United States under general trade, but the United States places military exports under "special category commodities" or includes them under military transfers which do not show up in the trade balance. Another oddity: Canada includes electrical energy as an export; the United States does not.

—Third-country destinations. Some $40 million in soybeans, for example, which were destined for West Germany but first shipped to Canada, were counted as exports to Canada by the United States, but toted up in West Germany as imported from the United States.

—Time lag or "float." Goods shipped from Japan to the United States, for example, will be counted as exports in the Japanese balance, but will not show up in the U.S. balance until they have been unloaded at a U.S. dock several weeks — or even months — later.

Reconciliation of the discrepancies, however, evidently is possible. After a year's effort, the United States last month announced that it had reconciled its trade data for 1970 with Canada, and a committee is working toward reconciliation of the figures for 1971 and 1972.

Prior to the bilateral agreement, U.S. data had indicated that Canada had a trade surplus of $2.008 billion while Canada said it was $1.036 billion. The reconciled figure for 1970 stands at $1.424 billion.

Significant discrepancies, according to the Department of Commerce, were an excess in customs valuation over transaction valuation of imports that accounted for $130 million for Canada and $400 million for the United States.

Unique Situation

Leonard Jackson, chief of the foreign trade division, U.S. Census Bureau, was chief of the U.S. team for the United States-Canada statistics committee. It was a unique situation, he said, and "it would be folly to try to interpolate from that to other countries."

He added that some methods learned in the negotiations with Canada will definitely prove useful if other countries should want to undertake bilateral or multilateral reconciliation.

With the growing importance of trade and its far-reaching political implications, Jackson said, "it is important that the best possible data be used. It can be very difficult to make progress and analyse trade without accurate data."

"It's not the disparity in statistics, but the way they're used," contends Leonard Tennyson, director of the European Community information service (ECIS) here. "The Americans tell the Europeans they're doing terrible things to U.S. agricultural exports . . . but the U.S. exports in agriculture are falling world-wide and, in the European Community, they've actually grown."

American agricultural exports to the Community from 1958, the year of the Common Market's formation, to 1971, grew from $821 million to $1.8 billion, a growth rate of roughly 120 per cent. World-wide agricultural exports increased from $3.8 billion to $7.6 billion, or merely doubled.

Japan Has a Choice of Paths

TOKYO — It appears from a lengthy conversation with Premier Kakuei Tanaka that Japan's current foreign policy is founded on American security guarantees, Chinese friendship and a relationship with Russia where economic potential is mitigated by political coolness. When assessing the views expressed by the present chief of government, it is notable that Western Europe doesn't figure large on his horizon.

Tanaka acknowledges there is a national debate on neutralism versus the United States treaty tie but dismisses advocates of the former theory as relatively unimportant. Were their ideas ever to prevail, he says, communism would be developed as an alternative to the present system and "the only logical result would be to divide Japan like Vietnam."

Fleet Protection

While conceding that this country relies for protection on the U.S. Seventh Fleet plus ultimate nuclear deterrents, he argues it is unreasonable to expect Japan to pay for this in the way West Germany does, by offset contributions for American military support in Europe. "That would merely strengthen the argument of those who wish to abrogate the bilateral security treaty," he contends. "We are not Germany. We have no Berlin Wall staring us in the face."

Moreover, he continues, Japan has no desire to become a military power once again. The Second World War was the first conflict the Japanese ever lost and they are unused to the "European game" of "sometimes winning, sometimes losing." Furthermore, they were the first and only people to suffer from atomic holocaust.

Therefore great resentment exists against the mere thought of re-creating serious armed strength, apart from modest self-defence forces. "Nobody," he says, "could win an election on the issue of constitutional revision to permit greater military power."

With this in mind, he insists, there is no fundamental difference between Tokyo and Washington and no contradiction in their views on China and Russia. He adds: "Not a single Japanese diplomatic action is taken on these matters without prior consultation and agreement with the United States." (This apparent lack of resentment at the so-called "Nixon shocks" is not shared by all Tanaka's Cabinet, notably Foreign Trade Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone).

PREMIER TANAKA
. . . no Berlin wall

With respect to China, a country toward which Japan feels a guilt complex and whose culture is viewed as Rome once viewed that of Athens, the Premier is convinced Peking has no aspiration for super-power status. He says: "That is what they told President Nixon and what they subsequently told me."

"Moreover, one-third of China's long frontier with Russia and India is restless and undefined. The Chinese population is rising at perhaps two per cent annually. Yet the Gross National Product is only half of Japan's. Therefore, they must concentrate on internal development. If China had truly wanted to be a global superpower it would not have encouraged the North Vietnamese to end their war."

Tokyo welcomes China's support in the Japanese dispute with Russia over territory seized by Moscow in 1945. Four small islands in the Kuriles are claimed by Japan. Tanaka says not only that Peking endorses this claim but that its press has written that the entire Kuriles group should be handed back, something not even Tokyo has asked for.

Attitude Unchanged

The Premier contends the Soviet government has not changed its attitude on this matter since 1957 when it offered to return two of the islands if Japan would agree to negotiate the status of the other two. He could not possibly "go back 15 years" on the issue, he insists. Therefore, it would be difficult for him to visit Moscow at this time as suggested by the Kremlin.

Nevertheless, he was prepared to separate the diplomatic question from the economic question raised by Russia's suggestion that Japan assist in development of Siberian natural gas and petroleum resources. The latter proposal could be dealt with on its merits, in terms of the precise conditions offered by Moscow and also in terms of the reactions of Peking, which is suspicious of Soviet intentions.

To summarize, Tanaka seems to place great reliance on continued U.S. understanding and support and also to hope for developing Chinese sympathy and diplomatic backing. Toward the U.S.S.R. his attitude seems to be dichotomic.

On the one hand he obviously desires an arrangement that would open to booming Japan new and relatively contiguous energy sources. On the other hand, he prefers political coolness until the territorial question is resolved.

B.C. Cares

The C.A.R.E. of Canada 1972 annual report is so encouraging that we simply had to tell you that British Columbians once again topped the rest of Canada in per capita donations. Not only did they top the rest of Canda but they increased their donations by more than 50 per cent. This generosity merits telling and the press of British Columbia have played a very large part in making this possible. In a cross-country survey of press clippings more than one-third of all clippings orginated in B.C. papers, for which we thank you very much.

British Columbia, in C.A.R.E.'s feeding program, contributed greatly towards meals supplied daily to 28,000,000 pre-school and school-aged children in 34 countries. This food contains a high source of proteins and vitamins: such as CSM, a blend of cornmeal, soya and milk powder; WSB, a special wheat-soya blend and other staples such as bulgur wheat, rice and vegetable oil.

Three British Columbia registered nurses, Linda Matthies, Vancouver; Sharon R, Dawe, Vernon; and Helen MacRae of Kimberley donated their services in Indonesia looking after the sick and the maimed.

There were many more good deeds performed through the generosity of your readers. Please thank them on our behalf and thank you, members of the press, for your invaluable assistance.—Douglas Smith, Regional Director, C.A.R.E. of Canada, 514—510 West Hastings St., Vancouver, B.C.

VANCOUVER — An underground interurban train service between Lytton Square and Main Street, Vancouver, is planned by the Canadian Northern Railway. Stations will be on the surface, 200 feet above the bed of the track. Communication with track stations will be by elevators. The tunnel will be four and one half miles and through it Westminster will be reached from Vancouver in twenty minutes. Tracks will be electrified, motors will haul the passenger coaches, while freight cars will be switched from the North Arm yards to False Creek by motor. Plans have already been approved by the company.

Science Telling Us More Than We Need

By FRANK KENDIG
Saturday Review

Proponents of science, I among them, often characterize it as a noble, vitally important quest for knowledge. On occasion, however, it occurs to me that the quest may have been entirely too successful. Science, to put it bluntly, is in very real danger of drowning in its own output.

Scientific and technical literature rolls off the presses at a rate of 60 million pages per year. In the last 100 years, according to Robert S. Daniel, professor of psychology at the University of Missouri, 400,000 titles have appeared in the field of psychology alone. Daniel adds that this output, when compared with that of the medical, biological, or chemical sciences, is relatively small. And the situation will probably get worse before it gets better, because our rate of knowledge acquisition is accelerating. By the time a child born today is 50 years old, said Robert Hilliard, an educational broadcasting expert for the Federal Communications Commission, "97 per cent of everything known in the world will have been learned since the time he was born."

Every time this point is made, there seems to be a loud voice shouting from the wings: "But what about the computer?"

Granted, it is conceivable that the bulk of scientific data could be stored in a computer and that a scientist, wanting to know what has been discovered about a particular atomic particle, for example, simply could push a few buttons and receive a near-instantaneous outpouring of pertinent information. But here is where the problem arises. As Emilio Segree, a Nobel Prize winner in physics, has stated, "On K-mesons alone, to wade through all the papers is an impossibility." How, then, does one separate the gold from the dross?

Weeding out the trivial and irrelevant in scientific literature is not a new problem. Consider, for example, the plight of Gregor Mendel, the Augustinian monk who is now regarded as the father of genetics.

In the mid-nineteenth century, about the time Darwin published his Origin of Species, Mendel was tending his garden in Brno in what is now Czechoslovakia. Mendel was a botanist: he grew peas. He was also a mathematician: he counted the peas he grew. Mendel noticed that even when he crossed a tall pea plant with a short one, he got only tall pea plants. In effect, he discovered that some characteristics (such as tallness in pea plants) are dominant, while others (such as shortness) are recessive. He published his findings in the Proceedings of the Natural History Society of Brno.

The point is that Mendel's findings could have cleared up one of the major scientific questions of the time — had the right person read and understood his paper. Darwin's theory of evolution had one serious flaw. It could not explain why, if a superior horse was bred with an inferior horse, the result was not an average horse.

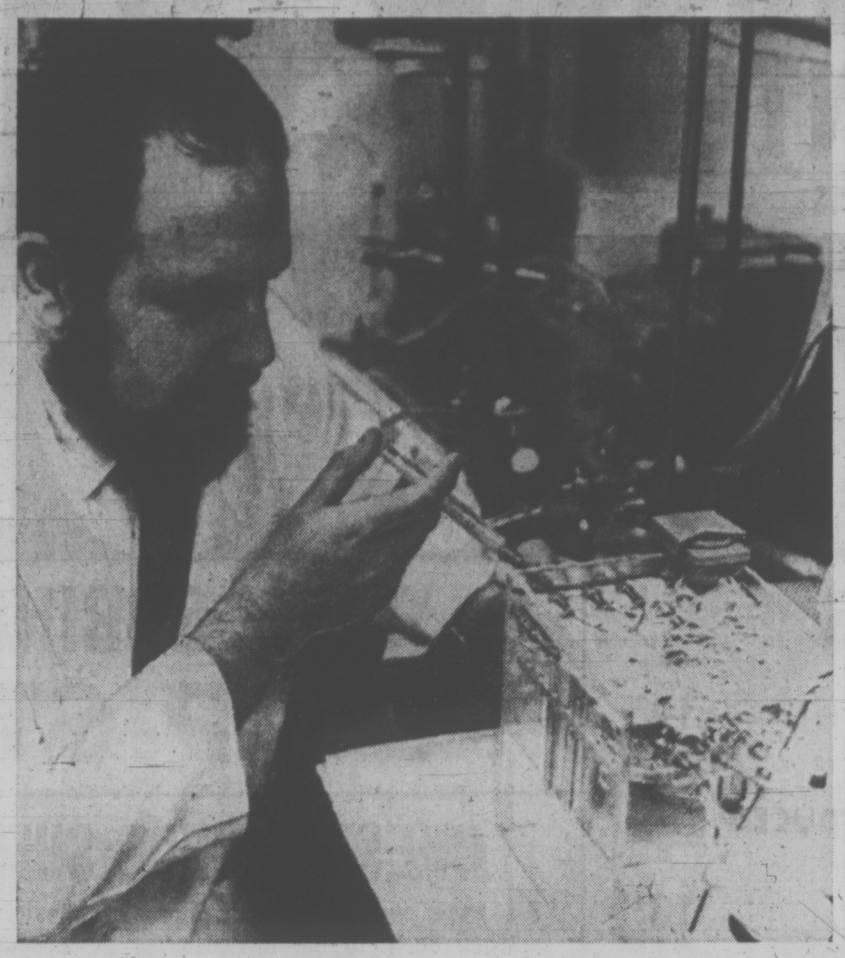
Natural selection required that the result be a superior horse, but Darwin could not explain the mechanism that brought this about. While the controversy over this problem raged, Mendel's paper remained unnoticed. Not until 31 years after its publication, after Mendel had died, did science discover that an explanation of the mechanisms for natural selection lay buried in the scientific literature.

Isaac Asimov has a theory to explain why Mendel's paper was overlooked for so long. "It was a paper with a biological title," he says. "It dealt with pea plants. Therefore, physicists and chemists and people like that wouldn't look at it. The title alone threw them off. Biologists might have looked at the paper because of the title but as soon as they saw the contents, they would have seen a series of numbers, some of which contained as many as three digits.

"Now in those days biologists didn't involve themselves with such higher mathematics, and as soon as they saw those three-digit numbers, they passed the paper by — with the result that there was nobody to look at it, and nothing happened. It just stayed there."

Now, what about a paper recently printed in Physical Review Letters, a publication of the American Physical Society? It is titled "Impact-Parameter Dependence of K-Shell Coulomb-Ionization Cross Sections." After reading the paper, I can honestly say that I have no idea of what it is about.

Of course, this is not to say that the paper is invalid or that it will not be extremely important to physicists. But what if there is a tiny bit of data buried in this paper, some offhand comment that could radically change the thinking of geologists or oceanographers or even plastic surgeons? Would this piece of information lie fallow for a generation, like Mendel's notions of dominant and recessive traits?



Valuable discoveries can lie unnoticed

This is the problem; no one yet has a solution.

Some people have suggested cutting back or even halting the flow of scientific literature. An extreme step, for example, would be to declare a moratorium on scientific publications for a decade or so. However, this is a feeble alternative, if an alternative at all.

First, it is doubtful whether the already-published material could be successfully weeded even in a decade; who is qualified to tell the gold from the dross? Furthermore, some genuinely important advances would be lost, perhaps forever.

A more viable solution would be to stop encouraging the endless outpouring of trivial or redundant data. Clinging to the "publish or perish" dictum, universities are the worst offenders on this count. No longer should the sheer weight of an instructor's publications be used as a gauge for academic advancement.

Another tack would be to develop some means of handling the enormous amount of scientific data produced. The computer again surfaces as a possibility; perhaps advances in cybernetics will someday provide a viable means of culling the trivial from the important. I would not, however, hold my breath until that day arrives.

The most reasonable solution, at least for the interim, would be to train a new kind of scientist — a "synthesist" rather than a specialist, one who could read and understand "Impact-Parameter Dependence of K-Shell Coulomb-Ionization Cross Sections" and explain it to anyone who needed to know. At present the professional science writer attempts — with occasional success — to fulfill this function.

Even if a viable solution does emerge, however, our problems are not quite over. There is still the question of the way data is used. The often-told story of the scientist and the flea accurately poses the problem:

It seems there was a scientist who trained a flea to jump at the sound of a bell. After each jump he would pull a leg off the insect. When the poor creature had only one leg left, the scientist rang the bell and the flea flopped over feebly. Then the scientist removed the remaining leg and rang the bell. The insect did not move at all.

Japan Reviving Tunes of Glory

By DAVID CONDE
London Observer

TOKYO — Recent American suggestions that Japan should bear a larger share of the military defence of the Pacific shocked many Japanese who have been trying to rid their country of its militaristic past.

Moves toward peace in Vietnam — although threatening Japanese business — have been welcomed by many people here. For the Japanese, the last 40 years have been filled with wars: their own wars of "Greater East Asia" in Manchuria, China, South-East Asia and the Pacific and the American-led campaigns in Korea and Vietnam.

Having had their militarism removed by the United States in the years since 1945 today's Japanese are little concerned with military matters. They have seen 2,500,000 American soldiers go through the ordeal of Vietnam and read reports by the U.S. Veterans' Administration that "the most persistent request from men back from Vietnam was for jobs."

But the faded nationalism of the 1930s is not entirely dead. Some members of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party are trying to stir up patriotism with moves like the campaign for the return of the northern Japanese islands occupied by the Soviet Union in 1945.

Hunt Bones of War

The Japanese government has sent costly missions all over Asia to find the lost bones of wartime casualties; surprisingly, there has been no outcry from the anti-war Japanese youth or the older peace champions. Under this guise of honoring the dead, the government has kept the war of Greater East Asia very much in the news. From Saipan to Siberia, these bone-salvagers have been permitted to probe and peer over battlefields without protest.

Some Japanese government leaders are trying to revise history to show that Japan fought an honorable war against the United States and its allies, that Japan only sought to liberate all Asians from the white imperialists. This line echoes wartime Prime Minister Hideki Tojo's declaration that Japan's attack on Pearl Harbour was in "self defence" and other leaders' claims that Japan's war on China was caused by the stupidity of the Chinese, who would not "understand Japan's true intentions."

Some people here explain that this kind of rewriting of history is necessary if Japan is to secure a new crop of fighters to "police the peace" in South-East Asia.

'War of Liberation'

Early in February a "Japan-Philippines Friendship Garden" was opened in Baguoi, about 50 kilimetres north of Manila. The garden and a huge granite monument were to commemorate the 520,000 Japanese killed in capturing and holding the Philippines during the war. The garden was paid for by the Japanese and the monument was imported from Japan.

Soon a second Japanese "friendship park" will be opened in Manila, to honor the Japanese dead and more than 500,000 Filipinos killed. This 600-million-yen project, approved by President Ferdinand Marcos and the Japanese foreign ministry, originated with Nobusuke Kish, a member of the Tojo cabinet. He promised while he was in jail as a war criminal to try to make people understand that the war Japan fought was not aggressive but was a war of liberation to free Asians from the Americans, British and Dutch.

Japanese who criticize this as a plot to whitewash the past so that Japanese youth will be proud to fight again for Japan also see President Nixon's invitation to Emperor Hirohito to visit America this year as part of the same movement. If Hirohito is made welcome in the United States they fear that soon they will be conscripted in a new Imperial Army to keep the peace in the new "Greater East Asia."

CONSUMERISM IN RUSSIA

A Premium on Inequality

By DEV MURARKA
New Statesman

Consumers are a special breed in the Soviet society. Instead of producers chasing them, they chase production. And if one scarcity is reduced another takes its place in no time. The authorities talk about reform, about increasing production but the problem remains.

The trouble is that scarcity changes its color like a chameleon. Yesterday people were short of bread and sugar. Today they are short of bananas and tomorrow they might be short of tape recorders, in a manner of speaking.

What then is to be done? Everyone is concerned about it. And this concern has brought forth some extraordinary ideas. The latest of the crop, and a most significant one, has come from two scientists who agree that as far as possible use of money should be abolished and consumers supplied from shops directly linked to a bank computer where they keep their accounts. On the face of it, it looks like a Soviet version of the Western credit-card system.

It all started simply enough. A Soviet scientist, R. Trakhtenberg, wrote to the weekly Literaturnaya Gazetta that people should not carry money about. Instead they should carry a key to their account and when they made their purchases they would immediately transfer the cost to the shop. He claimed that his scheme would also reduce inflation and unofficial earnings.

The editors of Literaturnaya Gazetta were so fascinated by the idea that they interviewed a higher ranking scientist, Academician Viktor Glushkov, a director of the Institute of Cybernetics and vice president of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences. It is this elaboration by Glushkov which has turned out to be one of the most revealing, some would say damning, clues to the Establishment thinking on the control of social problems. Academician Glushkov not only approves of the idea put forward by Trakhtenberg but goes further. He wants to devise an elaborate system where scarcity and privilege will combine together. He suggests that the shops linked to bank computers will have the exclusive supply of scarce goods. And since the bank will accept only income legally obtained, it will drive out illegal money.

Glushkov advocates that people should be allowed to open personal accounts. At present they can only have a savings bank account. And those who have personal accounts, depending on their income, should be allowed credit facilities as well.

The Academician also suggests that consumers' associations should be formed in all neighborhoods consisting of about 20,000 maximum members in each case. This will, in his view, encourage collective supervision of consumption.

The system Glushkov advocates, if one leaves aside the fancy trimmings of keys and computers, is in fact very similar to the bereozka or foreign currency shops which at present cater for privileged foreigners and high-ranking bureaucrats. Payment in these shops is by coupons which are issued against payment of hard currency.

Though these shops may compare unfavorably with their Western counterparts in terms of regularity and variety of supplies, they nevertheless do make necessities available which are either unobtainable, otherwise or too time-consuming to buy. According to Glushkov the system ought to be extended to the whole of society.

On the face of it the whole thing sounds reasonable enough. If this is the way people can buy more goods, there can be no harm in it, or so the argument goes. But looked at a little closely, what is being advocated is a permanent system of scarcities. It is taken for granted that scarcities will always be there and the only possible way to overcome it is to join a privileged class of people who will have a metal key to the consumers' heaven.

The system will have other virtues. It will not only legitimize privilege but explain away to the non-privileged that it is their own fault they cannot share in it.

Of course Glushkov does not even show awareness anywhere in the interview that he is, after all, legitimizing and sanctifying scarcity as a way of life. But unwittingly he has underlined that what the advocates of the status quo in the Soviet Union are seeking is not a radical change, not greater equality, but merely a superficial amelioration of existing conditions. In other words, they are seeking mechanical answers to social problems.

Not surprisingly, the Glushkov interview has managed to upset many people. It has come like a hammer blow to their expectation of an easier life ahead. It is not that they seriously believe that the Glushkov system is about to be installed. On the contrary, the authorities can only frown upon an idea which can only create a permanent and strongly resentful class of underprivileged.

But the intelligentsia feel that more and more goods and services in the Soviet society are becoming a matter of privilege rather than right anyway. Unhappily for them, Glushkov, with his premium on inequality, has taken away the fig leaf of pretension that it was otherwise.

Profit Man Hits Bleeding Hearts

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

Canadian Construction Association president Henry de Puyjalon of Ottawa Tuesday attacked "bleeding hearts" in all parties who oppose high profits for corporations.

If corporations do not make money they won't grow and if they don't grow Canada will be in a desperate economic condition, he said at a news conference in Victoria.

He was in the city to meet local construction officials.

De Puyjalon said if Canada was to be in a position to compete against the European Common Market and the United States, the proposed corporation tax reductions and speedy write-offs on equipment must be enacted into law quickly.

"There is little time to lose," he said.

"As for the bleeding hearts who opposed them, what do they want?

He said a proposed rate increase for Bell Telephone Company was opposed by "264 bleeding hearts" in Parliament.

De Puyjalon later amended this to 263, saying Real Couoette, the national Social Credit leader, came back from a vacation in time to defend the telephone company's application.

De Puyjalon said the whole nation should throw its support behind Bell Telephone, B.C. Tel and other transportation and communication companies.

"These are the areas where Canada excels. Nobody knows as much about transportation and communication as we do. This is the opportunity for exports. This is what we must export in the 70s and 80s, not rocks and barrels."

He said Canada must quickly establish national industrial goals stressing development of those things we do best, our knowledge of satellites and the areospace industry as well as transport and communications.

In the satellite industry Canada has a 24-month lead time over the rest of the world but this would vanish quickly unless federal policies encouraged its development.

The construction industry had a large role to play in all this development, he said, adding that construction is the number one Canadian industry in terms of dollar value.

About 500,000 are employed on job sites asd another half million employed in plants as a result of the construction industry, he said.

A major concern to the Canadian construction industry is the 12 per cent federal sales tax on production equipment.

The tax, which he said is unprecedented in the western world, amounts to something like 18 to 20 per cent when provincial sales taxes are added on to the gross figure.

If the construction industry has to continue to pay this tax along with the 11 per cent tax on building supplies, it will have difficulty in keeping up its current pace of growth.

"Sometimes provincial and federal governments fail to understand how big and important construction is to the nation. The country will be in deep trouble if we don't survive."

De Puyjalon became president of the Canadian Construction Association eight weeks ago and he described his British Columbia visit as a learning experience.

He met the B.C. Road Builders Association and Pipe Line Contractors Association of Canada today in Vancouver and Tnursday is to attend the convention of the pipe line contractors at the Bayshore Inn.

With him on his visit to B.C. is David Penner of Winnipeg, national vice-chairman of the association.

Denison

Denison Mines Ltd. reports net income of $1,647,000, or 36 cents a share, for the three months ended March 31 compared with $1,396,000 or 31 cents a share for the corresponding period last year.

The company said substantially higher net revenue from oil operations, improved results of Lake Ontario Cement Ltd. and increased investment revenue were partially offset by lower net revenue from uranium operations.

Bralorne

Bralorne Resources Ltd. has announced plans to expand into direct petroleum exploration and production in 1973.

Company chairman Paul Porzelt and President F. W. Fitzpatrick told shareholders Bralorne would do this by acquiring existing companies or establishing its own gas and oil division.

In its annual report to shareholders, Bralorne reported net earnings after taxes of $1,017,646 or 21 cents a share in 1972 compared to $195,425 or four cents a share in 1971.

Porzelt and Fitzpatrick said the large jump in net income was the result of the inclusion in net earnings for the first time of the earnings of Barber Machinery Co. Ltd. and the Eagle Industries Ltd. group of companies, which were acquired in the last week of 1971.

The company's shares are trading in the $2.70 range on the Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges.

CAPRICORN MINES FINED $2,000

EDMONTON (CP) — Capricorn Mines Ltd. was fined $2,000 and its president, Robert Kostynuk of Edmonton, was fined $500 when convicted in provincial court Tuesday of trading in shares without Securities Commission approval.

Capricorn is an Edmonton-based firm engaged in exploring and developing two properties in central British Columbia.

Joanne Veit, securities commission prosecutor, said the company issued 67,022 shares at 30 cents a share to 17 individuals and companies between Jan. 15 and Sept. 17, 1971.

Under securities legislation a public company must receive commission approval before selling shares.

Kostynuk testified that the company had sent out a prospectus in an attempt to raise $112,500. But the firm only received $13,850 it decided to return to private status and refunded the money received.

However, individuals asked to maintain their interest and be re-issued new shares.

Steel Belted Tires to Dominate Market

TORONTO (CP) — The new president of the Rubber Association of Canada says the swing to steel-belted radial tires will cost manufacturers millions of dollars in increased costs during the next few years.

H. G. MacNeill, president of Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. of Canada Ltd., says he expects about half of the new passenger car tires will be steel radials by 1975 and three-quarters by 1980.

"I'm sure all companies will have to make very expensive expenditures over the next few years."

His company recently announced a $56 million addition to its plant at Valleyfield, Que., for the production of the new tires.

Mac Neill says the problem facing most tire manufacturers is that the majority of tire-making equipment, especially in older plants, cannot be converted for use in steel radial production and must be replaced.

"Undoubtedly there is going to be some converting and some phasing out" of plants as the swing to steel radial continues.

STARTED LAST FALL

While steel radials have been in use in Europe for years, North American auto makers began offering them as standard equipment on some odels only last fall.

MacNeill also says manufacturers must look to other products as sources of revenue since the new tires last much longer than conventional tires and therefore are replaced less frequently.

The industry "must keep the government informed, if they intend to reduce tariffs further, of the effect it will have on the economy and on employment."

The federal government reduced the tariff on imported tires by five per cent to 12.5 per cent in its latest budget.

Further tariff reductions would allow U.S. parent companies of Canadian operations to transfer all their manufacturing back to the U.S. and ship to Canada because of economies of scale.

He also says the industry feels the proposal of the federal government to allow the French-owned Michelin tire company to import duty-free odd-sized tires not manufacturered at its plant in Nova Scotia gives the company "an unfair advantage" over Canadian manufacturers.

Danes Approve Strike Pact

COPENHAGEN (AP) — More than 260,000 workers returned to their jobs Tuesday after union members and employers overwhelmingly voted to end Denmark's broadest labor market conflict since 1936.

After three weeks of strikes and lockouts, both sides approved a compromise wage agreement which will increase pay and benefits for nearly one million workers by 7.5 per cent over the next two years.

Unity Keeps Old Rate

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's newest and smallest chartered bank — two branches now and one more opening Monday — says it plans to hold the line on interest rates despite increases by other banks.

President Richard Higgins of Unity Bank, said the decision is based on the reasoning that the bank is not a significant factor in the market and that it can maintain its competitive position with lower rates.

The Unity's prime rate — the rate it charges its best customers — is six per cent compared with 6½ per cent by the other banks following increases announced Monday and Tuesday.

"As of now, what we're saying is we're a small organization and we want to hold the line competitively as long as we can . . . we're judged, our shares are judged, the same as anybody's in relationship to earnings.

"We have an obligation to shareholders but we also have an obligation to consumers. So we're trying to say we want to be competitive so lets hold it for as long as we can."

Unity also pays a slightly higher interest rate than the other banks on deposits.

How is it working so far?

"Good. Our assets now are up around $45 million. We'll be showing a profit this half year of $300,000, profit at the end of the first year of about $600,000 with 12 branches."

New Board Produced From Waste

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — A chemist said Tuesday particleboard made from waste straw can compete in price and quality with interior plywood.

Robert R. Groner, agricultural chemist from Oregon State University, made the statement in an address to the 165th national meeting of the American Chemical Society.

Groner said wastepaper, straw and municipal wastes have been successfully transformed to useful products in the laboratory. Straw had been converted into a joint soil conditioner - fertilizer and into a common resin, he said.

Groner said any cellulose containing solid waste — municipal, commercial, agricultural or animal — is suitable starting material.

Particleboard is made in the laboratory from straw and municipal refuse which had been milled to the particle size. A resin is sprayed on the dried waste particles and the solid board is formed by heating and applying pressure to the mixture. Groner said a catalyst now is used to step up the process.

Groner said particleboard can be used in the construction and furniture industries, is easily sawed and drilled, and can be nailed and glued. Similar products made from straw have shown excellent thermal and acoustical properties.

'DEATH-HOUSE' BILL ON INSURANCE RAPPED

Spokesmen for each of the three opposition parties in the legislature expressed their displeasure Tuesday night with the NDP government's apparent attempt to establish itself in other fields of insurance besides auto insurance.

The legislature was debating the principle of the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Act, through which the government intends to set up the machinery for implementation of the mandatory government-run car insurance plan to take effect March 1, 1974.

The legislature has already given approval in principle to the insurance plan itself, after vehement disagreement from the Social Credit, Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties.

Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) said the legislation will "totally emasculate an industry which is healthy, non-polluting and taxpaying."

To a comment from Highways Minister Robert Strachan that the legislation is basically of a housekeeping" nature, Gardom said:

"Housekeeping? It's a death-house bill, that's what it is, for the insurance industry in B.C.,"

He said the least the government could have done was provide compensation for losses suffered by the insurance companies whose business will be lost by government entry in the field.

He compared the government move with the actions of Cuban Premier Fidel Castro, who he said expropriated property and businesses without providing compensation.

Ed Smith (SC — North Peace) said the legislation could potentially wipe out not only the car insurance industry but also the general insurance industry. Even life insurance is not safe, he said, although it would be a "pretty big task" for the government to take over life insurance in one fell swoop.

Smith said the government is giving itself the power to force people to buy all types of insurance from the proposed Insurance Corporation of B.C.

He said the government's decision to get into other fields of insurance "exceeds any mandate you had in the province of B.C." The government may have had a mandate to get into the car insurance business, he said, but general, fire, marine and other types of insurance are another matter.

"It is an unhappy day for B.C. to see this legislation come before us," he said.

Progressive Conservative house leader Scott Wallace said it is Conservative party policy that it is improper for a government to establish itself in the private sector.

"The function of government is not to compete but to supervise," he said, adding that the government could correct any injustices it detects. The policy should apply to mining, logging or any other industry, he said.

Wallace said the government insurance company will not be on a competitive basis with other insurance companies since it will not be paying taxes as other companies do.

He said a government corporation will be "impersonal and heavy-handed."

Expropriation powers contained within the legislation are indicative of the government's desire to acquire more power, he said.

Changes Would 'Wreck' Mines

By PAUL MOSS and BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Legislation designed to provide closer government control and regulation of the mining industry received a six-and-a-half-hour hammering Tuesday from all three opposition parties in the legislature before it was finally given approval in principle.

There were repeated complaints, as debate stretched from early afternoon into the night sitting, that the amendments to the Mineral Act will create difficulties and expense for small prospectors, deter companies generally from investing high-risk capital in B.C. mining ventures and open the door to widespread government intervention in the industry.

Some of the more gloomy predictions were that the legislation will "wreck" the mining industry within a few years, and create mass unemployment in the province's second major industry.

Two of the most contentious sections of the legislation, Bill 44, were the provisions which would attach a whole range of conditions to the granting of production leases for mining operations, and enable the government to acquire an interest or equity in any operation.

Liberal leader David Anderson said the combined effect of those provisions will be "a complete blank cheque to the government to take over industry without any compensation" and the power for the government to prevent any company operating in B.C. except on the precise terms which it dictates.

He predicted the legislation was the first step in a deliberate policy of the NDP government which would lead to government control of 30 to 40 per cent of the industry in another three or four years.

A similar theme was taken up by Conservative house leader Scott Wallace, in claiming that the bill is a technique which saves the government from coming out in the open and admitting that its real aim is to nationalize the mining industry. It is nothing more than "out and out dictation" to mining companies, he argued.

"The bill in effect says to the industry 'You pay out money, take the risks, do the work and then come to us and we may give you a production permit' based on such aspects as the operation's economic feasibility, safety standards and the prospects for ecological reclamation.

"You would be buying in on your own terms to any rich prospect," he said. "The government could say, 'Okay, you can have a production permit if we can buy into the operation.'" Perhaps it would be simpler, Wallace suggested with a hint of sarcasm, merely to employ government prospectors and forget about the private sector.

Mines Minister Leo Nimsick, who appeared to be in good humor throughout the day, was enjoying himself even more as he wound up the debate shortly after 9 p.m. Unabashed, he admitted the government wants to know "what's in it for us" before approving production proposals.

"What's wrong with the people who own the resource having an equity in it?" he asked.

He admitted, too, that last fall he had looked into the possibility of setting up a government exploration agency for minerals, an idea which he thinks has "merit." Nothing was done at the time as the was too busy with other matters, but Nimsick warned opposition parties: "Don't be too worried if it comes up again."

One of the main opposition complaints concerned the wide discretionary powers given to the mines minister in the bill, but Nimsick dismissed this and other points raised by arguing that anyone can read anything "sinister" into any piece of legislation, however innocuous it may be.

Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) charged that Bill 44 is "another infringement on rights and initiative, another restriction, another example of the hampering of development, another step toward the hindering of a flourishing economy."

Bob McClelland (SC—Langley), who predicted the government plans to "get into the mining business in a big way," said the basis of the bill is "what is good socialism, not what is good legislation or what is good for the mining industry."

In a speech lasting more than three and a half hours, Don Phillips (SC-South Peace River) said the bill contains measures which will deter prospectors large and small from investing in the province, and lead eventually to mass unemployment in the mining industry.

"Bill 44 is the evil star that is shining and casting the jinx over all the mining prospectors in British Columbia," he said.

Anderson said the mineral legislation is a "carte blanche" which could lead to a future minister of the crown "badly abusing" the government's powers.

Bill 44 was opposed by the Socreds, Liberals and Conservatives when it passed the second reading hurdle on a 32-15 vote.

Similar concerns were expressed earlier Tuesday, during second reading debate on amendments to the Petroleum and Natural Gas Act, which would double the royalty on petroleum products to an average 30 per cent.

Ed Smith (SC-North Peace River) said for every dollar the petroleum industry earns in B.C. 57 cents goes to the province, and that return is more than adequate.

"We take none of the risks and we take the lion's share of the dollars generated," he said.

For the sake of some $10 million a year in additional revenue the government seems prepared to run the risk of discouraging further exploration and deterring companies to the point where they finally leave B.C. to seek a more favorable climate elsewhere.

Phillips said last week's sale of drilling rights for oil and gas in northern B.C. should have produced "three or four times" the sum actually collected ($3.3 million), and predicted that the sale to be held next August will be even less productive.

McGeer said the mines minister and the government appeared to have overestimated the industry's willingness to pay "exorbitant royalties, when the risks are so high and the difficulties so great."

McGeer said the policy as applied under the legislation will reduce the risk capital companies are prepared to invest in the province, curtail exploration and result in fewer jobs, "in the interests of collecting more revenue so the government can provide richer services to the fat cats that live in Coquitlam and Vancouver East."

When government jeers greeted that remark, the MLA retorted that people in those areas are "fat cats" compared with people living in a northern mining community such as Fort Nelson.

In closing the debate, Nimsick said the government considers that those who deplete non-renewable resources have a responsibility toward the province and citizens that own them, especially when there are only six years of proven reserves left.

The bill was given approval in principle on a formal 31-16 vote, in which the Progressive Conservatives sided with the Socreds and Liberals in opposing the legislation.

Alta. Urged to Copy B.C. Disclosure Bill

EDMONTON (CP) — Public officials ranging from cabinet ministers to school board members would be required to disclose their land holdings under a private member's bill introduced in the legislature Tuesday.

Albert Ludwig (SC—Calgary Mountain View), who introduced the bill, said it is based on legislation before the British Columbia legislature and "on the principle expounded by the premier of Ontario."

The bill would apply to cabinet ministers, other MLAs, members of municipal councils and school trustees. In addition, the cabinet could designate any senior government official to be a "public official" who must disclose his interests.

Juvenile Home Rules Slammed

EDMONTON (CP) — An opposition MLA charged Tuesday that visiting rules at a juvenile detention home operated by the city of Calgary are more stringent than federal penitentiaries.

Art Dixon (SC—Calgary Millican) said serious charges about the treatment of juvenile offenders at the Calgary detention institute have been levelled by citizens in Calgary.

Health Minister Neil Crawford replied that the length of time juvenile offenders spend in restrictive facilities is almost always short.

"Active attempts are always made to place the child in an atmosphere where he can benefit from instruction and rehabilitation."

Drilling Won't Bother Army

EDMONTON (CP) — The drilling of test wells on a vast military reserve in southern Alberta will not likely interfere with training exercises planned by the British army, according to Don Gerry, minister of intergovernmental affairs.

He told the legislature that military spokesmen have suggested the British army might restrict its aetivities if there is a problem "but it appears there will not be on the initial drilling."

Official Accused of Favoritism

WINNIPEG (CP) — Conservative House Leader Warner Jorgenson has accused a high-ranking appointee of the Manitoba government of favoritism in his handling of an agricultural loan application.

Jorgenson told the legislature that Max Hofford, chairman of the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation, had reversed approval of land purchase loan to a Swan River family venture so that his own son could buy the land instead.

"This has to be one of the worst examples of nepotism we have seen in this government," the Tory MLA said. "We can only speculate as to how much more of this is going on."

Indian Treaties Up to Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP) — Saskatchewan Indians surrendered their aboriginal title to land by signing treaties which Canada has failed to fulfil, the Saskatchewan Federation of Indians said.

Federation president David Ahenekew told the Commons Indian Affairs Committee the promises made in the treaties must be made good by the government and not through the courts or through government commissions.

"The courts would never understand the intent of the treaties when they were signed," he told Walter Dinsdale (PC Brandon Souris).

'Murder Ring' In B.C.

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — A "murder enforcement ring" exists in Vancouver, professional eastern criminals have moved in and a Seattle-based crime syndicate is trying to establish here, says police chief John Fisk.

Fisk is asking city council's finance committee to restore $299,961 cut from his department's 1973-74 budget by city officials.

He made the allegations about organized crime in documents given to council Tuesday. He could not be reached for further comment.

Fisk said he wants to form a nine-man organized crime squad at a cost of $65,903.

He said professional eastern criminals have moved into Vancouver because of police pressure in Quebec and a feeling that Western Canadian cities are "ripe."

Jail to Stay

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — The present British Columbia Penitentiary will not be closed until 1978, the federal government told city council, giving rise to protests from aldermen.

Ottawa said a study is being carried out to determine the facilities needed for a smaller penitentiary than the one scheduled to be built on federally-owned land in the city sometime next year.

Ald. Thelma Bennett said this might mean the city will have two penitentiaries on the land and presented a motion to have the city tell Ottawa it does not want a penitentiary inside city limits, now or at any other time.

Climate of Suspicion

TERRACE (CP) — David A. L. Tait, president of the British Columbia Chamber of Commerce, said Tuesday a "climate of suspicion" hangs over the province and "for the economic good of the province, that is bad news."

Tait, a Vancouver chartered accountant, said there was "a wide gap between the smooth reassuring talk from Victoria and the arbitrary, dominating legislation being placed in the house to concentrate more and more power in the cabinet's hands."

Drug Overdose

SMITHERS (CP) — Pathologist Dr. B. M. Fraser told a coroner's jury Tuesday that Hagwilgate Indian Donald Wilfred Austin, 44, died from a swelling of the brain and lungs which could be attributed to an overdose of a combination of drugs.

However, he said that during his autopsy he found no signs of injection marks on Austin's arms. He also said he didn't find any signs of heart trouble or external violence.

NDP Nomination

VANCOUVER (CP) — The New Democratic Party's riding organization in Vancouver-Centre Tuesday nominated Ron Johnson, 21, to contest the riding in the next federal election.

The riding is currently held by Urban Affairs Minister Ron Basford.

Annual SPCA Plea

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Society for The Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Tuesday issued its annual plea that parents give children toys for Easter, rather than live chicks, ducklings, rabbits or other small animals. The society said such animals are usually neglected and abandoned after the novelty wears off a day or two after Easter.

Windfall

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council Tuesday discovered a $1.2 million budget windfall because welfare costs will be $341,000 less than anticipated and after department budget requests were trimmed and errors corrected, a $381,000 surplus was revealed. Council will decide next week whether to increase city spending, or use the surplus to reduce the projected mill rate.

Air Rights Sought

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Calgary firm has applied to buy the air rights over Vancouver's False Creek, for a distance of about two miles, to erect a platform for a "multi-billion dollar diversified complex."

City officials said Jack Singer, president of Atlas Finance and Realty Corp. Ltd. of Calgary, made the application to the National Harbors Board, which passed it along to Harry Pickstone, acting city planning director.

LAST LICK of paint and elbow grease was being applied to the West German cruiser Deutschland today, moored at navy buoys in Pedder Bay. Her country's largest naval vessel, she is due to arrive in Vancouver Thursday morning for three days of official ceremonies. She put in at Pedder Bay to titivate before "showing the flag" on the mainland. She will leave early Thursday morning, taking on a pilot off Brotchie Ledge at 4 a.m.

'Operation Nasty Deal' —The Soldier As a Cop

"I don't think it really upset people as much as the newspapers let on," said the general, presumably with an engaging shrug, and before the incident is officially marked "Closed" I want him to know that I consider it to be a totally fatuous remark.

If people weren't, in fact, upset they had every reason and right to be and every reason and right to insist that it dam'd well never happen again.

The things that went wrong last week with Operation Nasty Deal, the anti-riot training scheme of the armed forces based here, were bad enough. When civilian workmen are held at gunpoint for two hours there's cause to be not merely upset, but outraged. When soldiers carrying rifles can enter a public place and be exonerated by their commanding officer as "damned alert" (though it was, he conceded a "regrettable incident") it is a matter deeply upsetting not only to those civilians who chanced to be in that public place but to all of us who value our freedom.

But these "incidents" were simply the predictable miscalculations in a much nastier deal that has gone on too long, the creation of a military police force deliberately equipped and trained as a primary function to turn its might on a civilian population.

It was not merely "the worst waste of the taxpayers' dollar I've seen," as a corporal of 20 years service told our Pat Dufour. It was yet another demonstration of the beginnings of a Gestapo philosophy in this country that needs to be nipped in the bud.

For some 30 months, as a roving correspondent through all the nations of Latin-America, I observed armed forces whose only conceivable "enemy" was their own people and the people's aspirations to a better way of life.

In Argentina, in Brazil, in Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, wherever I travelled, I saw the gorillas in uniform who regularly went through the kind of riot drill we saw last week, but the cracked heads there were real heads, the students, the union men, the dissidents who were "controlled" were real men and women.

Now we have that same kind of force here to be used, presumably, against any faction of society deemed to be against national stability, precisely the justification for the existence of those armed services throughout South America.

The apologetic, but proud, general in charge of this local charade, Brig.-Gen. George Brown, might or might not agree with James Eayrs that a free society is constantly threatened so long as it permits the existence of such forces. Eayrs has written, "Police states are rarely founded deliberately, as are colonies or dynasties . . . they slide silently upon the scene, are acquired in a fit of absence of mind." That is one of the basic lessons of recent history.

But the general might agree, though perhaps not in public, that armed forces are more apt to assume unwittingly sinister powers in times of peace than in times of war, that when there's no enemy at the gates they're inclined to invent enemies within.

I know, myself, as an ex-serviceman, that in a time of peace there is a near hysterical effort to maintain a military establishment, the very base of rank and influence. That can be the only possible explanation now for soldiers to be assuming a domestic, internal role, the role of policemen, when God knows we've enough cops to control any foreseeable riots.

Justification is the name of the old army game, in other words, and so it was not surprising that an officer who chose to be identified only as "a service spokesman" should have provided it.

"There are some who ask us what earthly reason there could be for an exercise like this," he is quoted. "The same question might have been asked a few years ago in Eastern Canada — but then came the FLQ crisis in October, 1970, and Ottawa found it had to send in soldiers to maintain the peace."

This simplistic explanation is either the worst kind of naivete or deliberately misleading. Even if you don't take the view that the invoking of the War Measures Act was a crime against the democratic tradition, the troops involved were never in anything resembling a riot situation. The arrest of hundreds of persons for their political beliefs, eight times as many as those who ever faced a charge, the pre-dawn invasion of homes, were the work of police, not military men. It is simply not the case that "Ottawa found it had to send in soldiers to maintain the peace," as this anonymous local spokesman claims.

Indeed, the so-called "FLQ crisis" has been a convenient justification for the most mysterious of all our "security forces," the Security Planning and Research Group, itself with a strong military representation, which keeps a wary eye, so it is said, on subversive organizations, though what those subversive organizations are is a matter for the group's own secret operation. If what we saw last week in Operation Nasty Deal is the physical extension of that group it is another giant stride toward the police state mentality.

We're remarkably tolerant in these climes of a preposterously large military force that, really, has nothing worthwhile to do. So long as they simply play games with their rubber boats or Bailey bridges or hurl grenades out at Albert Head or sail in their handsome sloops we're not inclined to object too strenuously. But when these lads take up arms for the express purpose of turning them against civilians, when their training becomes a negation of the flexibility and responsiveness of the democratic system, it is time to become very upset, indeed.

WELFARE BUMS

So Few of Them They're Not Worth the Hassle, Says Levi

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

There probably are not enough true "welfare bums" to worry about, says Rehabilitation Minister Norman Levi.

In an interview, Levi admitted, "I'm not quite sure what people mean by welfare bum because, you know, we have people in all levels of society who try to beat the system."

But: "I have only met about a half-dozen people in my 17 years in this business (as a social worker and parole officer) that wilfully will not work."

He cautions that one must not confuse the welfare recipient who conscientiously refuses to work and those who are "socially handicapped" to the extent that they cannot work.

"You put a guy who's been on welfare two, three or four years on a job and he has no discipline, he can't stay there, and he can't achieve at the work level and he's usually the first guy to get fired or get disillusioned and walk away."

For such a person, "we've got to build up the guy's ego and his confidence and we need to do some training in that area."

Most people on welfare, Levi insists, "would prefer to work if they could work. Not if they had work, but if they were capable of working."

What about those who conscientiously refuse to work, even when work is available, and prefer to live on welfare?

There is probably not much that can be done, Levi replies.

"I met a group of people out in the Sooke area who are doing a recreation thing who do not want to work," Levi recalls.

"They are on welfare and say we should continue to pay them. We are continuing to pay them.

" . . . I think there's three of them, that's all. I have hopes that one of them, at least, will get back into the stream.

"But if not, I guess we are not going to get into a great hassle for there are people who have dropped out, who don't identify with the society and, I think, as long as they don't become too numerous, we are just going to give the money and ride the thing out."

Levi points out "there's a lot of hassling in getting somebody to work. You have to cut them off welfare, put them on, you say if you don't work we're going to put you on vouchers. And you have all this system where he comes back every second day and he ties up staff.

"It becomes very costly and it doesn't achieve anything.

"But I don't, of course, subscribe to the idea of a welfare bum. I don't think that it is a phenomenon that we have to concern ourselves too much with."

Levi says he personally subscribes to the belief that "people should make a contribution." He believes also that the public is not prepared to accept the concept that a certain segment of the community need not work and can live off the collective wealth of community indefinitely.

"You know, the taxpayer is not that ready for that kind of thing," he says.

"After all, the thing that overrides most of the problems in respect to (complete rejection of work) — and it's a phenomenon of the young— is the whole drug problem.

"Older people, my age people and older get up tight because these people are dropping out and you hear a lot of people say: 'What the hell are they dropping out from? They never had it so good.'"

Still, there is a welfare "burden" that must be assumed by the community.

"I think we have to accept that we have some people who are never going to function at 100 per cent. They are too damaged. . . "

"For instance, in the single man (category) which is our largest single unit, we estimate that between 60 and 70 per cent of them are not employable for medical reasons — medical-social reasons, alcohol and drug addiction, serious physical problems which have been accumulated over the years and neglected.

"Then we have the socially disabled. Those are the people who have always been unable to compete — inadequate untrained — these kinds of people.

Bawlf Rejects Denny Claim

Ald. Sam Bawlf says downtown businessmen are "out of touch" in pushing for denser zoning to allow big office blocks downtown.

The 28-year-old Victoria city planning chairman challenged store owner Tom Denny's claim that current zoning was too low in density for economic use of high-price city land.

Land is priced according to what a developer can put on it, and $12.50 to $15 (Denny's stated price of downtown land per square foot) is the prevalent price for adequate recovery of costs under current zoning, Bawlf said.

Bawlf rejected Denny's suggestion that prestige office developments had been discouraged by current zoning.

"The reason the Royal Bank did not build at Fort and Douglas is that they paid far in excess of what (Denny's) downtown land costs."

"We're looking at densities of eight-to-one in Vancouver (floor space to land area ratio) and anyone who wants what Vancouver's had should move there," Bawlf said. "Vancouver now is taking a painful look at down-zoning."

"We've got potential for four million square feet of office space in dow town Victoria. The new Bank of Commerce building (on Douglas) had a lot of trouble filling up a total of 200,000 square feet," Bawlf said.

"It's folly to concentrate all new development in one new tower and sap development from the rest of town. It's much wiser to distribute it across the main axis routes."

"As for the claim that low-density zoning will result in a future council suddenly taking the brakes off and causing sudden overgrowth — that's exactly what the downtown business advisory committee is suggesting," Bawlf said.

He also confirmed that a traffic-free mall on Government, of which he has been a major proponent, has been scrapped. Instead traffic will go one way down two lanes between widened promenade sidewalks.

Bawlf said traffic studies had shown a pedestrian mall is just not feasible. The studies cost $9,000.

City Firms Awarded Gov't Contracts

Contracts totalling more than $122,000 have been awarded to two Greater Victoria firms for work on provincial government buildings, Public Works Minister Bill Hartley announced today.

Dalziel Construction Ltd., 6111 Central Saanich Road, will undertake $68,797 worth of renovations to the cafeteria at 617 Government and Cana Construction Ltd., 1321 Gladstone Avenue, has received a $53,438 contract for general alteration work to the finance building at 612 Government.

Pay Hike Urged For Council

Mayor Peter Pollen will recommend a pay increase for city aldermen at council's regular meeting 2 p.m. Thursday.

Exact amount of the increase was not immediately available.

Also to be discussed at the meeting is a contract proposal for the city's 250 inside workers amounting to 21.55 per cent over two years to December, 1974.

The contract proposal is expected to be approved at a meeting tonight of members of Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 388.

Other business at the council meeting will be discussion of an "Inner Harbor Special Precinct" bylaw which will change the current commercial zoning to a strictly-controlled marine-oriented special area.

The fate of a Heritage House in the 1,000-block Yates Street owned by Peter Rapanos, who wants to sell the house site as an apartment package, will also be discussed.

Release of council business in today's paper is a new development recently authorized by the city administration at the instigation of the Times.

King Urged To Settle TAS Strike

Labor Minister Bill King will be asked to try to bring both sides together in the three-month strike of 20 women against Telephone Answering Service (Victoria) Limited, 727 Johnson.

Jim McAvoy, business agent for Local 230 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said there have been no meetings with management.

The answering service has continued to operate by hiring replacements for the women who went on strike Jan. 19 for a new contract.

McAvoy said the longer the strike goes on, the more "danger" there is of it becoming a long strike like the one at Sandringham Private Hospital, which began Sept. 30, 1970.

Erickson's Harbor 'Mickey Mouse'

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Two long-time Victorians today described Vancouver architect Arthur Erickson's plans for the Inner Harbor as impractical and "Mickey Mouse," resulting from ignorance of local conditions.

Bud Simms, operator of the tourist water taxis in the harbor, and timber broker Ian Sherwin, who was born in James Bay, both say that Erickson's concept of a causeway and bridge across the harbor, an open-air theatre where the Black Ball ferry now stands and a marina on the Ocean Cement site will fail.

Both say that Erickson hasn't taken into consideration that the prevailing winds come from the southwest, making all three projects impractical.

Simms recalls, "We had an open-air theatre back in the '50s and although it was on the sheltered side (Belleville) it still was a failure because of the wind. People sat on bleachers where the Welcome to Victoria sign is now and watched the show, which was staged on a scow in the harbor."

They both criticize the concept as detracting from the real appeal of Victoria as a working harbor.

Sherwin says, "The plans as described, with little bridges and fountains (Erickson suggests a fountain in the area of the harbor cut off by the causeway and bridge running in a straight line from the Ocean Cement site to the Wax Museum) sound first class for a shopping centre but they smack of Disneyland."

In Simms' opinion the plans could also produce hazards:

"You know how rough it gets," he says. "The CPR boats have had to have tugs to manouvre them. A marina at Ocean Cement would be dangerous because lots of pleasure boats are small and couldn't take the pounding."

He agrees with Mayor Peter Pollen's suggestion that the Ocean Cement site should be used for commercial fishboats.

Erickson has suggested that the bridge on the proposed pedestrian causeway could be raised to allow small pleasure boats to go through.

Sherwin asks, "What about all the yachts that come in for Swiftsure?"

Simms suggests it could also be expensive:

"You'd have to have a man posted there 24 hours a day."

Victorians and tourists alike have used Simms' water taxis to get their first impressions of the Victoria harbor. Simms says it's the tugs, commercial fishboats and the every-day routine of the harbor that appeals to them most.

"As far as I'm concerned," he says, "the people want to see the harbor at work, including the pulp mills, rather than the scenic Gorge waters. When we reach there all they want to know is how much the houses cost.

"Even Max Lohbrunner's old whaler, after she sank, was a tourist attraction. Thousands of pictures were taken of her."

Simms said if city engineer Jim Garnett and his staff had played a more prominent role in the Erickson plan, a lot of what he considers bad mistakes could have been avoided.

Affirming that the working aspect of the Inner Harbor should be retained as much as possible, Sherwin says:

"Victoria has a famous sailing history. Proud ships like the Thermopylae and the Sea Wolf sailed out of here. the harbor is the real thing, not a phoney.

"The emphasis should be on maritime, not Mickey Mouse."

Lit Up, Let Down

A 23-year-old hitch-hiker was picked up on Esquimalt Road Tuesday — and let down with a $75 fine in provincial court today.

Ross Charles Ogilvie, 1373 Lyall, stopped to light his hashpipe while waiting for a lift. A private car stopped. Ogilvie got in. When his driver asked what he smoked in his pipe he told the man it was hashish.

His driver then gave him the bad news — he was a drug squad officer — and drove him to Esquimalt police headquarters, to be charged with possession of hashish.

Probation for Manager

Judge Moved by Witness

Ex-Coronet theatre manager Frank Sannor today was given a six-month probationary term in provincial court after a mayor and a retired clothing retailer appeared as character witnesses.

Sannor was convicted March 23 of presenting an immoral performance, the Swedish film Wild Honey, when he was theatre manager at the Coronet last August.

Saanich mayor and MLA for Saanich-The Islands, Hugh Curtis, told the court he and Sannor had been business acquaintances for five years and had found the man to be "a quiet, conscientious citizen."

But it was Karel de Roo, retired clothing retailer who moved the court with his charcter testimony for Sannor.

In passionate tones, de Roo described the ex-theatre manager as a man who lives alone, and whose weight and equilibrium had been "badly hurt" by the trial proceedings.

"You are a most persuasive advocate," said Judge William Ostler.

Sannor's defence counsel, Dermod Owen-Flood had asked for an absolute or conditional discharge for the theatre manager, on the grounds that he had been "a pawn" in the film showing.

Ostler pointed out what he called "an exquisite inconsistency" in the defence's approach to the case. Owen-Flood has already filed notice of appeal against the March 23 conviction.

"If you get a discharge, there will be no conviction to appeal," said Ostler.

Owen-Flood argued that the appeal against the judgment and the request for a discharge were separate affairs.

The judge, noting that the accused intended to "challenge the adverse conviction" of March 23, decided in favor of a suspended sentence, at the suggestion of the Crown.

Appeal date against the conviction has not yet been set in county court.

Q. Please tell me why gold mines in Canada sell their gold to the government at $48 per ounce when the open market price is hovering around $90? Just how much actual gold backing is there behind the Canadian dollar? W. E. B.

A. For an answer to your question about the price paid for gold by the federal government, please write to The Master, The Royal Canadian Mint, Sussex Street, Ottawa, Ont.

The agent for the Bank of Canada in Vancouver says the bank, which has the sole right to issue notes for circulation, does not hold gold against the dollar.

Section 21 (1) of the Bank of Canada Act states, "the bank has the sole right to issue notes intended for circulation in Canada and such notes shall be a first charge upon the assets of the bank".

The statement of assets and liabilities for the Bank of Canada for March 31, 1973, lists assets of $7,001,291,745.70. Most of these assets are securities issued and guaranteed by Canada, bonds and debentures issued by the Industrial Development Bank, and securities issued by a province, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The bank's statement lists among liabilities notes in circulation amounting to $1,529,595,473.71. The Receiver-General of Canada holds the gold backing Canadian securities.

Film Clips Used To 'Nullify Orr'

BOSTON (CP) — New York Rangers, continuing to survive the early Boston blitz, Tuesday night wrapped up a 6-3 victory and their National Hockey League quarter-final series with the Bruins, 4-1.

It was the first time New York had beaten the Bruins in a playoff series since 1940 when they performed the feat in the semi-finals en route to their last Stanley Cup.

The Rangers advance to the semi-finals against Chicago Black Hawks who won their quarter-final, also 4-1, with a 6-1 win over St. Louis Blues Tuesday. The semi-final opens in Chicago Thursday.

Rookie Steve Vickers, a three-goal man for the Rangers, said it was Boston's inability to intimidate the underdog New Yorkers in the first game of the series here that turned the round in their favor.

"We just showed them from the opening game we weren't going to be intimidated," said the 21-year-old winger, one of the leading candidates for the rookie-of-the-year award.

Bruce MacGregor, Walt Tkaczuk and Rod Gilbert scored single goals for New York. Bobby Orr, Ken Hodge and Don Marcotte tallied for Boston.

Brad Park, Rangers' perennial all-star defenceman, said that films of the Boston club reviewed at Rangers' pre-series camp enabled New York to nullify Orr's contribution to Boston's effort.

"I'm not going to say what it was," Park said, "but it certainly must have had something to do with our victory.

Orr scored his first point of the series with his goal Tuesday night that tied the score 1-1 in the first period and then set up the Bruins' first power play goal — by Hodge — that put Boston in front 2-1.

Park said the New York team knew Boston "would throw everything at us in the first 10 minutes, like they did out there tonight, and that all we had to do was hang in there."

"We checked Orr real well," he said, adding that part of the program was designed to take the Boston defenceman's best line of attack away from him.

"There were certain things they were doing we thought we could capitalize on."

Asked how the Rangers could duplicate the Boston superstar in a workout, Park candidly admitted he played the role.

Asked if he scored any goals while playing the part, he replied: "No. Their teammates had me checked pretty good."

"They're a good club with a lot of good young legs. We just don't have the team here that we had a year ago," when the Bruins took six games to knock off the Rangers in the Stanley Cup final.

"They simply outhustled us. But we gave it all we had."

The rookie Boston coach, who took over midway in the schedule from Tom Johnson, had the club flying late in the season and beat the Rangers twice in the closing games to sew up second place in the East Division and home-ice advantage if the series against New York went the full seven games.

Vickers, who scored on three of his five shots in the game, said it was the Rangers' strategy from the start to take as many shots as possible in all the games.

"We knew they were having trouble in goal, so we knew to beat Boston we'd have to shoot 35 to 40 shots a game."

Dissent had been rumored among the Bruin players since 44-year'old Jacques Plante was picked up in a late-season trade from Toronto Maple Leafs: Ed Johnston, a 12-year veteran with the club, played only seven periods of hockey in the final month with Plante and Ross Brooks, a 35-year-old rookie sharing the chores.

Plante got shelled in the first two games by New York. Johnston replaced him in the next two, winning one and looking impressive in both.

Brooks started Tuesday's game but retired with a groin injury after the first period, Johnston moving in with the Rangers holding a 3-2 edge.

"I was satisfied," Johnston said of his play, despite allowing three goals. "I thought I had something to prove and I think I did in this series," he said of persistent rumors that he will be traded to Toronto to complete the Plante deal, rumors which Boston management has refused to deny.

Crozier Pads His Revenge —Sabres Win in Overtime

MONTREAL (CP) — On Feb. 10, coach Joe Crozier of Buffalo Sabres made a promise and Tuesday night he kept it as the Sabres nipped Montreal Canadiens 3-2 in overtime to force a sixth game in their Sanley Cup quarter-final series.

Rene Robert's second goal of the game at 9:12 of the first overtime period gave the Sabres their second win in the series which resumes Thursday in Buffalo.

Robert also assisted on linemate Rick Martin's goal while Frank Mahovlich and Guy Lapointe scored for Montreal.

It was just before regulation time ended that Crozier made good his promise made after the Sabres' second visit to Montreal during the regular National Hockey League season.

On the night in February, Montreal coach Scotty Bowman called for the measurement of the goaltending stick used by Buffalo's Dave Dryden.

The stick was found illegal by the referee and the Sabres were given a penalty late in the third period and the Canadiens held on for a 2-1 win.

After the game, Crozier, who has made it plain he is not one of Bowman's admirers, vowed he would get revenge.

With 29 seconds left in the third period of Tuesday's game, he did. Crozier asked referee Bruce Hood to measure goalie Ken Dryden's pads. Following a measurement at the end of regulation time, the Montreal goalie's pads were found to be over the 10-inch maximum width. As a result, Montreal played short-handed for the first two minutes of the overtime.

ALL SET UP

"He had this all set up," Sabres' backup goalie Dryden noted. "He told me a couple of weeks ago that Ken's pads were illegal.

"I honestly didn't think he would pull that, but he is a very thorough coach. There's nothing wrong with being thorough."

Dryden said that Crozier sent him to the Sabres' dressing room to get a rule book and find the regulation pertaining to goalkeeper equipment.

Not to be outdone, Bowman tried to get Hood to measure Sabres' goaltender Roger Crozier's pads as well.

But Bowman made the request during the intermission and was told he would have to wait until the end of the first overtime period to have the measurement carried out.

Bowman said that Clarence Campbell, the National Hockey League's president overruled referee Hood and referee-in-chief Scotty Morrison during the intermission before the overtime and didn't allow the measurement to take place.

When asked why he waited until so late in the game to call for the measurement, Crozier snapped:

"It was done then because we were going into overtime. It was an opportune time to do it."

When confronted with his goaltender's admission that Crozier had known about the pads for some time, he said:

"If Mr. Dryden made that comment, use his quote. I have nothing to say about it."

"That game is over. We won the game in overtime on our own."

Indeed, the pad-measuring overshadowed Robert's fourth goal of the series at 9:12 of the overtime. Robert took a lead pass from linemate Gilbert Perreault and walked in alone, leaving defenceman Jacques Laperriere well behind.

Canadiens led 1-0 at the end of the first period on Frank Mahovlich's goal at 16:22 but Martin and Robert scored within the space of 68 seconds midway through the second period to put Buffalo ahead 2-1.

Guy Lapointe tied the game at 12:46 of the third period and the Canadiens swarmed in the Buffalo zone for the tie-breaker, but Roger Crozier saved the Sabres from defeat and elimination.

Crozier blocked 38 shots and was easily the game's outstanding player. The Sabres had 34 shots at Dryden.

Lapointe suffered a bad bruise on his right leg and winger Marc Tardif was cut over the left eyelid in the game, but both players should be back in Montreal's lineup for Thursday's game, which will start at 5:05 p.m. PST.

Hawks Oust Blues; Flyers Lead Series

By The Canadian Press

Chicago Black Hawks today start preparations for their National Hockey League semi-final round while Philadelphia Flyers hope to close out the other West Division first-round series.

The Hawks whipped St. Louis Blues 6-1 Tuesday night to win their best-of-seven quarter-final 4-1. The Hawks now advance against New York Rangers for the third straight year in semi-final action.

In the other Western game, the Flyers edged Minnesota North Stars 3-2 in overtime to take a 3-2 lead in that series.

The Flyers and North Stars meet again Thursday in Minneapolis while Chicago plays host to the Rangers, who advanced by defeating the defending Stanley Cup champion Boston Bruins 6-3.

The Chicago-New York semi-finals the last two years saw each team win once. The Hawks won in seven games in 1971 and the Rangers swept over Chicago in four games last year.

Previously, the Hawks won in six games in a 1968 quarter-final and took a 1931 semi-final from the Rangers 3-0 in a two-game, total-point affair.

Chicago, West Division champs for the third straight year, eliminated St. Louis with first-period goals by Jim Pappin and Stan Mikita and completed the rout with two goals in each of the second and third periods.

The Blues' scoring punch appeared to disappear completely as they managed only 13 shots at goalie Tony Esposito while the Hawks had 32 shots on goal.

Philadelphia, also on home ice, faced a tougher opponent as the North Stars outshot the Flyers 32-27, including overtime.

Gary Dornhoefer scored the winner at 8:35 of the overtime period after Bill Goldsworthy got the tying goal for Minnesota in the third period.

Philadelphia's Rick MacLeisch, a 50-goal scorer in the regular season, got both goals for the Flyers after Minnesota had taken an early lead on a goal by Danny Grant.

Dornhoefer's winner came after he picked up a loose puck and skated into the Minnesota zone to beat goalie Cesare Maniago.

Sports Fixed Says Ex-Bookie

MONTREAL (CP) — Theodore Aboud, a former book maker currently serving time for fraud, said Tuesday he helped fix two horse races at a local track in 1961 and knows "that sports are fixed everywhere."

"We made a lot of dollars on that deal," he told the Quebec Police Commission inquiry into organized crime when describing the fixing of races in September, 1961.

Aboud said both races were rigged so that a horse named Itty Bitty Debby could win and that the fixes had been made by payoffs to the opposing jockeys.

The former bookmaker also said he was involved in a more complicated fix at Blue Bonnets in 1968 or 1969.

Aboud said a trainer named Taylor had entered the race with a horse that had been run badly all season in a deliberate effort to build up the odds against it.

Aboud, currently serving 10 years in prison for a series of frauds, testified behind closed doors but with reporters present and permitted to publish his evidence.

Expos Funny Losers

By The Associated Press

Manager Gene Mauch of Montreal Expos said Tuesday there was "nothing funny about losing," but the Expos, along with Los Angeles Dodgers, San Diego Padres and Texas Rangers, provided some comical displays of futility in major league baseball.

The Expos lost to Philadelphia Phillies 7-5, the Padres were beaten 11-2 by San Francisco Giants, the Dodgers dropped a 4-3 decision to Houston Astros and the Rangers were whipped 12-1 by Kansas City Royals.

The Expos pulled their comedy act in the third inning when the Phillies scored four runs, three of them unearned.

It started innocently enough with walks to Mike Ryan and Denny Doyle and Steve Carlton's run-scoring single. But when centre fielder Jorge Boque threw the ball past third base, Doyle also scored and Carlton reached second.

He didn't stop there, continuing on to third when catcher John Boccabella let third baseman Bob Bailey's throw get through for another error. Carlton stayed put on Larry Bowa's infield hit but scored when Bailey fielded Cesar Tovar's grounder and fired wildly to the plate.

Deron Johnson's sacrifice fly completed the riotous inning and Willie Montanez put the game out of reach with a two-run homer in the fifth.

San Diego's pitching was funny enough in the first inning when the Giants used Ed Goodson's bases-loaded triple and Juan Marichal's two-run double to score six times. The fielders got into the act in the second when the Giants added a run on shortstop Enzo Hernandez' throwing error and the rest of the infield brought the house down in the seventh.

With two runners aboard via singles, first baseman Nate Colbert, second baseman Dave Roberts and third baseman Dave Hilton booted successive ground balls for a couple of runs and Bobby Bonds followed with a two-run single.

Fading Eyesight Shatters Softball's Oldest Battery

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — John Malone squinted toward home plate, then fired his last pitch Tuesday and hung up his glove as the world's oldest softball hurler.

He is 96.

"That's it, I'm going home and I'm not coming back," said the great-great-grandfather from Madison, N.J.

He was wrapping up a 21-year pitching career with the Kids and Kubs. He is the senior player in the Three-Quarter Century Club, Inc., an active team of men 75 years and up. Their 40-game schedule begins in November and ends in March.

Joining as an inexperienced rookie when he was 75, Malone has played more than 800 games.

"That's what kept me alive so long, I'm sure of that," says the retired salesman.

Although he has been suffering from arthritis in his hands and back, he blames sudden sight complications for forcing him into retirement.

Maloney has outlived all the players he joined with, and even saw three team-mates suffer heart attacks or strokes on the field.

Said Kubs' captain, William Davis, 91:

For Maloney and Davis it breaks up the "oldest battery in softball."

"But the game goes on next year," said Davis, stopping to cheer Edward Stauffer, 75, of Pittsburgh, around the diamond. Stauffer spent nine seasons with the old St. Louis Browns and Chicago Cubs.

Hatcheries Not Necessary When Streams Protected

"Renewable and continuing resources such as wildlife, forests, fisheries and recreational aesthetics are assets to a population that only time can measure in value. We believe that resources such as fisheries and forests should and can be compatible in their harvesting and maintenance and that one cannot sensibly be sacrificed for the other."

So began a well-balanced brief presented earlier this week to the select standing committee on fisheries and forestry by the Pacific Trollers Association, which represents commercial salmon and albacore tuna troller fishermen in B.C.

By "well-balanced" we mean that it attempted to take into account both sides of the picture and didn't take an extremist attitude.

After pointing out that the loss of small breeder streams for coho and spring salmon often stems from poor logging practices, the PTA cited similar developments in the state of Washington.

"Massive effort through hatchery construction has served to replace lost natural escapements. This program has served to buoy Washington State sport and commercial salmon fisheries, resulting in a relatively static landed salmon poundage in the last 10 years," stated the brief.

"We see the beginning of a similar hatchery program in B.C. to replace lost native chinook and coho salmon stocks. Costs of this program are being borne initially by the taxpayer, and progressively to a greater degree by the fishermen. As laymen on the sidelines we witness the division amongst technical personnel regarding natural salmon propagation as opposed to the hatchery.

"We cannot accept total dependency on non-diversified and expensive methods such as hatcheries and consider them to be a sacrifice of one resource for another."

Later on the brief took the forest industry to task for one of its favorite themes nowadays. This attitude could be paraphrased as: "If the public wants more forest recreation and protection, they should be prepared to foot the bill for it."

"We believe too much attention has been paid to one cost, without taking into consideration all the others involved," said the PTA. "By this we mean not only the cost to the forest industry, if they have to leave green strips along all streams, but also with this subject the cost of building, maintaining and operating hatcheries to supply the lost production from rivers and creeks which have been logged over."

Maintaining that the public should have some say in the management of our natural resources, the PTA recommends setting up of "provincial resources advisory boards," where industry and members of the general public would meet. Secondary regional boards would report to a primary control board, which in turn, would be answerable to the provincial cabinet.

Other recommendations in the brief:

- "... all logging operations be required to post a bond in a substantial amount to be set by the minister of forests. This bond to be surrendered in the event of non-compliance of the operation with the plan laid down beforehand, which should include extensive cleanup and restoration of the area to the satisfaction of the department concerned.
- "All use of herbicides to cease.
- "An alternative method of slash disposal, less destructive than burning be found.
- "All destruction of deciduous tree species in lowlands and adjacent areas to fish supportive waterways to cease.
- "Any stream with characteristics of well-defined route, gravel deposits and incidence of some pools indicating probable flow beneath surface level, be considered fish habitat streams."

This latter recommendation is especially important and the banks of such watercourses should be given protection in any cutting plans.

This doesn't mean to say, as the brief points out, that some arbitrary green strip should be established for all streams in B.C. The tremendous diversity of topography and soils within the province obviously precludes any such blanket legislation.

WHA Decides War Is Best

NEW YORK (CP) — The World Hockey Association flexed it muscles Tuesday and decided it was better to fight it out in the courts than make an unworkable peace with the National Hockey League.

An attempt to bring the two leagues together in the near future failed when the WHA vetoed any merger or association with the NHL pending the outcome next fall of anti-trust lawsuits against the NHL and its reserve clause.

"We are in very serious litigation and any future relationship with the NHL would have to come out of the litigation," said Gary Davidson, WHA president.

The WHA will go ahead with its lawsuits seeking damages "in excess of $50 million on all accounts" from the NHL "because of the strong position that our counsel tells us that we have," Davidson said.

The case is due to be heard in federal court in Philadelphia in late September or early October. "It depends on the lawyers," Davidson said.

ATTACKS CLAUSE

The WHA alleges that the NHL has violated the anti-trust laws by maintaining a conspiracy to monopolize major league hockey, using the reserve clause to bind players to one team until traded or sold, and preventing competition.

The WHA, which has just completed its first regular season, drew more than 2.5 million fans in a dozen cities in the United States and Canada. It sets a precedent in hockey by dropping the reserve clause from its standard contracts.

As long as the NHL retains the reserve clause, it would be impossible for the WHA to consider any formal agreement with the NHL, Davidson told a news conference after a two-day meeting in New York of owners or trustees — from the 12 teams in the WHA.

The WHA has been a constant thorn in the side of the NHL, raiding 70 of its players last year and possibly another 20 this year. High bids for established stars have driven up salaries in the NHL and the owners apparently are feeling the pinch.

But the players would lose their bargaining power if there were a merger between the rival leagues.

Out of the blue, a trial balloon on possible merger was floated on April Fool's Day.

Both NHL president Clarence Campbell and Davidson were aware of it.

The so-called secret meeting in New York between four NHL and three WHL club officials on Sunday, April 1, ended up not so secret.

It was reported to have been called by Bill Jennings, president of New York Rangers and a member of the NHL board of governors.

An informed source said the other NHL governors at the meeting were Ed Snider of Philadelphia Flyers, E. Jacques Courtois of Montreal Canadiens and Peter Block of Pittsburgh Penguins.

The WHA representatives, the source said, were Robert Schmertz of New England Whalers, Nick Mileti of Cleveland Crusaders and Ben Hatskin of Winnipeg Jets.

Jennings ducked all comment. Campbell said the meeting had nothing to do with him. Davidson obviously had his ear to the ground and the WHA meeting on Monday discussed the possibility of formal contacts with the NHL. On Tuesday the answer was no, at least for now.

Davidson said he believes the NHL governors who met privately were "sincere" in their efforts and the meeting was not a ploy to get around the anti-trust lawsuits.

"But at the present time," he said, "we intend to continue our program as an independent league."

No expansion is planned for next season, but after that there may be new franchises in several cities.

Davidson was not talking about applications for franchises but only about possible new sites. Among those mentioned were Denver, Miami, New Orleans, Vancouver and Montreal. He said he personally favors Denver and Miami.

Saints Find New Stars

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Minnesota Fighting Saints rediscovered a couple of lesser-known journeymen Tuesday while keeping a close check on Winnipeg star Bobby Hull to move back into contention in the World Hockey Association playoffs.

Minnesota's Jimmy Johnson scored twice and penalty-killer Lynn Lilyholm got a key insurance goal to lead the Saints in a 6-4 victory over the Jets, cutting Winnipeg's lead to 2-1 in the best-of-seven quarter-final series.

The Saints have a chance to tie the series tonight when the teams face off again at St. Paul, Min..

In the other series involving West Division teams, Houston Aeros meet the Sharks in Los Angeles tonight with that set tied 1-1.

Johnson, who missed 45 season games with Minnesota due to injuries, scored once in the first period Tuesday and then broke a 4-4 tie with his second goal early in the third period.

Lilyholm added the insurance goal just six seconds after he had helped kill off a penalty.

Billy Klatt, Bill Young and Wayne Connelly got the other Minnesota goals in the first period while Bill Sutherland, Dunc Rousseau, Cal Swenson, and Jean Guy Gratton scored for the Jets.

The Minnesota checking kept Hull, Jets player-coach, off the scoreboard for the first time in the series and Winnipeg suffered a further setback with the loss of centre Chris Bordeleau.

Bordeleau was struck on the ankle by a puck in the first period and was taken to hospital for precautionary x-rays. A crowd of 5,151 at St. Paul's 16,000-seat Civic Centre saw the Jets outshoot the Saints 40-30 with goalie Jack McCartan having the most work in the Minnesota nets while Ernie Wakely took the loss in the Jets goal.

In an Eastern Division quarter-final in Toronto's Maple Leaf Gardens, Rick Sentes scored twice to help Ottawa Nationals score their first victory in three games and keep their series with New England Whalers alive.

The clubs meet again Thursday night in Toronto.

Warriors Beat The Snow

By The Associated Press

Milwaukee general manager Wayne Embry had the right idea when he tried to have the fifth game of the Bucks' National Basketball Association playoff series postponed.

Forced to play the game in Madison, Wis., after being evicted from their home court by a realtors show, the Bucks asked for the delay when a snowstorm prevented them from reaching their impromptu home for a workout.

Golden State beat the snow into Madison and held a two-hour practice. It must have helped, because the Warriors knocked off the Bucks 100-97 Tuesday night to take a 3-2 lead in their best-of-seven quarter-final.

In the only other NBA game played Tuesday night, Los Angeles Lakers defeated Chicago Bulls 123-102 to take a 3-2 lead in that best-of-seven series.

Embry's request for the postponement was rejected by Golden State general manager Bob Feerick and that decision was upheld by the NBA when Embry pursued his request with the league office.

Rick Barry sank a layup and two free throws with 1:14 left to play, shutting off a Milwaukee comeback and helping the Warriors to the victory. Clyde Lee had 21 points and 16 rebounds for Golden State.

Swedes Tie Czechs

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union stretched its first-place lead to three points in the world hockey tournament Tuesday as Vladimir Petrov's three goals led the undefeated Russians to a 9-1 win over Finland.

It was the seventh straight win for the Russians in the double round-robin competition, giving them 14 points. Sweden is next with 11 points after playing to a 3-3 tie with defending champion Czechoslovakia.

The Czechs have nine points followed by Finland with six and West Germany with two. Poland is winless after seven games.

The Russians, who have outscored their opposition 70-12, got three goals in each period to defeat the Finns. The Finns scored their only goal when Veli-Pekka Ketola beat goalie Vladislav Tretyak in the second period.

The Swedes earned their tie when Ulf Sterner scored on a power-play midway through the final period. Czechoslovakia, upset 2-0 by Sweden in a first-round game, took a 1-0 lead in the first period when Jiri Holik scored a power-play goal.

Oil Kings Trip Tigers

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmonton Oil Kings survived a shaky start and scored two goals in each of the second and third periods Tuesday to defeat Medicine Hat Tigers, 5-4 in the first game of their Western Canada Hockey League semi-final series.

Barry Dean and Lanny McDonald scored goals for Medicine Hat before the fifth minute of the game. Tigers appeared in command of the match but John Rogers scored for Edmonton before the period ended.

Mike Will of Edmonton and McDonald exchanged early third-period goals before rookie Rocky Maze bounced the puck in off a Medicine Hat defenceman's leg from the corner to win the game.

Larry Hendrick was outstanding in the Edmonton net as he recorded his third consecutive playoff goaltending victory. Jerry Thomas appeared shaky throughout some parts of the game as Tigers outshot the Oil Kings, 37-35.

There were only eight minor penalties in the game, five to Tigers. Bob Gassoff and Dick Jellema also received misconducts.

The second game of the best-of-seven series is scheduled here Friday with the third and fourth games in Medicine Hat, Sunday and Tuesday.

Two Pros Tangle In First Round

Action in the Vancouver Island Open golf tournament will shift to the Goige Vale course Sunday with the spotlight aimed at a clash between professionals.

Winner of several events on the Canadian pro tour and one of the favorites in this year's Island tourney, Wakeham fired a four-over-par 76 in the qualifying round while Silverberg earned his spot among the 32 qualifiers with a 79.

Swimmers Seek Support

Money for training can improve Canada's chances of swimming medals at the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal and officials across the country hope the answer lies in "swim-a-thons."

Victoria's Swim-a-thon, in which swimmers from the four area clubs — Victoria Olympians, Juan de Fuca Cohoes, YM-YWCA and the Saanich Swim Club — seek pledges of cash contributions and then try to complete anything up to 200 lengths, will be staged Saturday at the Crystal Pool.

There will be two sessions, with youngsters swimming from 6 a.m. until 8 a.m. and adults getting their turn from 8:30 until 10:30 p.m.

Money raised, needed mainly to offset the high cost of pool rental for the great number of hours required to maintain a high standard, will go mainly to the local clubs. They will get 70 per cent while 20 per cent goes to the provincial section of the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association and 10 per cent goes to the national body itself.

Jim Moody of the Olympian Swim Club said Tuesday swimmers from his club had set their sights on $5,000.

"In the past four years, swimming had demonstrated that it is unique in Canada in its ability to win Olympic medals," Moody said. "Of the 10 medals won by Canada at the last two Olympics, swimming has taken eight."

Many young swimmers have already done the door-to-door rounds seeking support. Anybody who hasn't been contacted and would like to sponsor a swimmer, should call 385-8504 or 592-2243.

BOBICK DECKS BURNS

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — Olympic heavyweight boxer Duane Bobick made his professional debut Tuesday night, flooring Canadian veteran Tommy Burns four times and stopping him at 2:59 of the first round.

Burns came out brawling but the 22-year-old Bobick, a native of Bowlus, Minn., staggered him with a right hand coming out of a clinch for the first knockdown.

Bobick knocked the 29-year-old Vancouver construction worker to the mat two more times in quick succession and put him down with a body punch for the final time.

Burns, who has lost twice to Canadian champion George Chuvalo, now has a 13-9-1 pro record.

Norton Is Anxious To Find Security

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — Ken Norton is in a hurry to make up for a late start. He's anxious to capitalize on his newly won fame as a heavyweight boxer before it's too late.

Norton, 28, stunned the boxing world recently when he broke Muhammad Ali's jaw while gaining a 12-round split decision victory in San Diego.

"I'm just relaxing," Norton said from his home in this Los Angeles suburb, but he explained why he's so eager to fight soon and often. He seeks money for his young son's security as well as his own.

Norton doesn't want to fight for a living after two or three more years "because when you're over 30, you start slipping downhill."

Norton was the young bull in the life of 31-year-old Ali, and Ken was still "juiced up" over his conquest. Yet he must look forward, not backward.

"I want liquid assets in the bank because anything can happen. I could walk outside tomorrow and get hit by a truck, and then everybody suffers."

Everybody to Norton is his six-year-old son, Kenny Jr. Norton won custody of the then 18-month-old child when he was divorced from the boy's mother.

KEN NORTON

"I'm anxious to get back into training and fight again," said Norton, who earned $50,000 for the victory over Ali, who got $210,000. Norton had never fought for more than $8,000. Now trainer Eddie Futch wants him to fight "a contender" within six weeks, and some of Norton's future purses might be in six figures.

Norton talks of Kenny Jr. with strong paternal pride.

"We have a very, very close relationship. We're not only father and son but we're friends and that makes a lot of difference to my way of thinking," he said.

Kenny Jr. is not allowed to watch his father fight, although he got to see the Ali-Norton fight on television the next day "because I won."

"I don't want him to watch me because if I lose or get hurt, it might have a bad effect on him. I don't want anything to bother my son."

Norton doesn't want his son to become a boxer. "I want to make enough money whereas he won't have to do something like this. If I can make it, it'll be easier for him."

The 6-foot-3, 210-pound Norton also spends leisure time riding a motorcycle, which he calls his "chopper." His one real extravagance from his years as a "ham and egg" fighter is a Lincoln Continental Mark IV.

Norton excelled in football, basketball and track which won him a scholarship to Northeast Missouri State but after two years he quit school and joined the Marine Corps. And became All-Marine heavyweight champion three times.

When Norton got out of the Marines, businessman Art Rivkin and Bob Biron of San Diego formed Holiday Fighters Inc. Asset No. 1 was a "green" but tough ex-Marine boxer.

Still he won his first 15 fights, 14 by knockout, before his only loss, an eighth-round knockout nearly three years ago to Jose Luis Garcia in Los Angeles.

Kiwis Call Off Springbok Tour

WELLINGTON (AP) — New Zealand prime minister Norman Kirk has shut the door on a planned tour by South Africa's Springboks rugby team because the all-white squad was "selected on a racially-discriminatory basis."

He also claimed the Springbok tour, scheduled for later this year, could "create strains within our society" and even trigger "disorder and violence."

He asked the New Zealand Rugby Union to inform the South African rugby board that the New Zealand invitation to the Springboks must be deferred until the South Africans pick a team "on a genuine basis of merit."

"A tour by a team selected from white South Africans only would exacerbate differences of attitude of racial matters within New Zealand and create strains within our society," he said.

"It would damage New Zealand's broader international relations by reducing its standing and credibility as a humane country with a successful multi-racial society."

B.C. Deposits Worth $27 Billion

VANCOUVER (CP) — R. H. Seraphim, a Vancouver geological engineer, calculates that British Columbia probably has 4.5 billion tons of copper and molybdenum deposits, currently worth about $27 billion.

Seraphim has completed a 38-page report in a comprehensive attempt to compute resources, and has sent it to Mines Minister Leo Nimsick.

At current and planned expanded production, ore deposits will last 57 years, Seraphim said, and future discoveries would increase the total if there are sufficient incentives to encourage exploration.

The age of open-pit mining has brought a third variable, stripping ratio to the better-known two of tonnage and ratio, he said.

This stripping ratio forces a calculation providing several alternatives that would give a better appreciation of the economic value of the deposit.

"Some engineers have ignored this concept and created many problems," he said.

A continuing problem in mine development, said Seraphim, is sizeable differences in assay returns.

"Different assay houses not only provide different assays on splits from the same pulp, he said, but they show a "fairly consistent bias when a number of assays from such splits are averaged."

Average net deviation of three firms ranged from .020 to .027, his paper said. A difference of .020 reported too high could cost a producing mine $1 million in a year, he said.

Grade calculations are another source for costly error he said, noting that extrapolating grades from a single drill hole to millions of tons of minerals "has resulted in some major errors."

His paper, completed before new mining tax announcements, said it would take 11 years before a mine could return its first dividend.

It is vital, he said, that initial reserve and grade calculations, and stripping ratios, be reliable.

In his conclusion, he adds that "a cleaner set of tax rules is necessary before we can determine which, if any, of our idle deposits can produce metal at competitive prices in the world's markets."

WHY CANADIANS LEFT

Efforts of the Canadian Red Cross team in Vietnam were frustrated from the moment they arrived and, in nearly a month, the team was never able to do the job it had been called to do.

The tale of frustrations was told Tuesday to the Men's Canadian Club of Victoria by Major-Gen. A. E. Wrinch, national commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross.

The Paris ceasefire agreement had included an invitation to the Red Cross to send teams from two or more national societies to try to improve living conditions of prisoners.

Canada and Poland were chosen to go to Vietnam, but the Polish team never arrived and without them the Canadian group could not officially act as representatives of the four ceasefire signatories.

Inspection of prisoners of war living conditions was to be completed by Feb. 11 but by March 3, when the Canadian team finally left for home, they were still unable to even start their job.

Wrinch talked of troubles with the Saigon telephone system and military police who wouldn't honor their credentials.

He said whenever he finally got through to an official who could give them clearance to start their work, he was always put off and frustrated.

On Feb. 22 the Vietnamese government finally offered the team transportation for their job but then refused to commit themselves on a starting date.

Wrinch said he would only go back if there was concrete evidence of the sincerity of everybody concerned.

Publisher's Widow To Inherit More

CALGARY (CP) — Agnes Eileen Bell, widow of newspaper publisher and businessman G. Max Bell, was granted Tuesday an additional annual payment of $74,100 above that stipulated in Bell's will.

Alberta Supreme Court directed the money be paid out of the residue of Bell's estate, estimated at $23 million when he died last July 19.

Mrs. Bell, 43, was originally bequeathed two homes, an interest in a third, $50,000 and the revenue from another $500,000.

Counsel W. A. McGillivray said under this arrangement, and considering her private income, Mrs. Bell's annual revenue after taxes was about $30,000, inadequate to maintain the two homes and her previous style of living. A sufficient amount was estimated at $100,000 yearly.

Most of Bell's estate, $21 million, went to the charitable Bell Foundation. The additional annual grant to Mrs. Bell, which is to rise 2.5 per cent annually to compensate for inflation, is to come from the foundation's capital and would avoid income tax.

The widow's request for additional support was not contested.

Bell was chairman of FP Publications, president of Sun Publishing Co. Ltd., publisher of The Albertan and a director of CP Rail at the time of his death.

Other bequests were not affected.

55 Minutes Of Obscenity Nets Jail Term

MOBILE, ALA. (AP) — A Mobile man has been sentenced to six months at hard labor on a charge of making a 55-minute obscene telephone call to two South Central Bell Telephone Co. operators.

Police said the man, Jimmie Picken, 29, told officers he was forced to make the call by a man who held him at gunpoint after robbing him.

The operators called police while the call was in progress.

Picken also was fined $105 on a charge of resisting arrest.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — President Idi Amin of Uganda said Tuesday that former president Milton Obote, now living in exile in Tanzania, is free to return to Uganda. Amin overthrew Obote in a military coup two years ago.

More Secret Funds In Watergate Case

WASHINGTON (WP) — About $70,000 in funds from President Nixon's campaign was transferred last July from the same account that financed the Watergate bugging to a principal assistant of former U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell, according to investigative sources.

The money, mostly in $100 bills, was given to former White House aide Frederick C. Larue, one of Mitchells' closest political advisers, for purposes yet unknown.

The transfer came two weeks after the arrest of five men last June 17 in the Democrats' Watergate headquarters and several days after Mitchell resigned as the President's campaign manager, the sources said.

TRANSFER APPROVED

The transfer was approved by former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans, the finance chairman of the Nixon campaign, according to sworn testimony given this month to federal investigators in New York City.

The fact of the $70,000 transfer is the first indication that the president's re-election committee continued to maintain a secret account of some sort after the arrests in the Watergate affair.

The general accounting office was not told of the transfer, as required by the new federal election campaign act, which directs full public accounting of all campaign money after April 7, 1972.

Philip S. Hughes, head of the federal elections office in the accounting office, responded Tuesday to an inquiry about the $70,000 by saying,

LAW IS CLEAR

"It seems that the law is loud and clear that all money in their hands after April 7 had to be fully accounted for. If this money went out in July and I've never heard of it before — I don't think any reasonable person could argue that it was not a violation — even Stans hasn't argued that."

The money came from a large cash fund which was kept in Stans' office safe and was used to finance a broad campaign of political espionage and sabotage.

That intelligence-gathering fund, which fluctuated in size between $350,000 and $700,000, was the source of at least $235,000 for convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy, the former finance counsel to the Nixon committee.

KEPT THE LID ON

Larue was directed by Mitchell to keep the public and federal investigators from learning many details about the Nixon committee's involvement in the Watergate bugging, according to highly placed sources in the Nixon campaign.

Meanwhile, federal investigators in Washington are known to be checking into testimony of convicted Watergate conspirator James W. McCord Jr. that he received $3,000 a month from the late wife of co-conspirator and former White House consultant E. Howard Hunt Jr.

It could not be learned if there is any connection between the alleged payoffs mentioned by McCord and the $70,000 transfer of funds.

NIXON COULD BLOCK TESTIMONY

WASHINGTON (WP) — U.S. Attorney-General Richard Kleindienst, in a sweeping assertion of executive prerogatives, declared Tuesday that President Nixon has the power to forbid federal employees from testifying before Congress under any circumstances — including impeachment.

Testifying before an unusual joint session of three Senate subcommittees, Kleindienst maintained that the doctrine of executive privilege could properly be invoked even in the face of Congressional investigations of alleged wrongdoing by White House aides.

"This is a power relegated to the President of the United States alone," Kleindienst said of executive privilege. Under it, he declared, the president "logically" has the authority to block Congressional demands for any document within the executive branch as well as the testimony of any of its 2½ million federal employees.

Sen. Edmund Muskie (D—Maine), chairman of the Senate sub-committee on intergovernmental relations, called the attorney-general's claims "frightening."

"No administration in the history of this country has ever asserted the concept (of executive privilege) as you have today," Muskie told him.

Repeatedly, Kleindienst suggested that the only real limits on the President's powers, in a confrontation with Congress, are those imposed by public opinion and the electorate. But he said Congress does have "a remedy" if it doesn't like the way those powers are being exercised.

Island Wildlife Hit by Logging

PORT HARDY (CP) — A conservationist says bad logging practices by the British Columbia timber industry have destroyed so much winter range on Vancouver Island that deer and elk herds have been decimated.

Ed Mankelow, first vice-president of the British Columbia Wildlife Federation, said in an interview there is only one major watershed between Victoria and Port Hardy—virtually the entire east coast of the island—that has not been logged over.

He identified it as the Tsitka River near Alert Bay and said the federation, along with several other conservation organizations, is attempting to get B.C. government protection for the area.

Mankelow also accused the forest companies of chopping down the narrow bands of trees previously left standing in logged valleys to prevent the spread of slash fires.

"We're not against all logging because the economy of the province depends on it," he said. "What we as a federation are trying to say is that we can have both—logging and wildlife.

"If only the forest companies had left a stand of timber here and there in the valleys, that would have been all that was necessary to save a deer herd.

"Instead they log entire valleys and don't leave a tree standing. These valleys remind me of a picture of strip mining in Kentucky—it's a dead landscape."

Mankelow said deer and elk need openings in the forest for summer range where plants like huckleberries grow, and for winter range they need mature trees at low elevation.

The forest companies, he said, have often claimed that logging opens up summer range and the deer population increases in logged areas.

"At first that's true because logging opens up forest and increases the amount of summer range. But as logging goes through an entire valley it's a different story because the whole of the winter range has been turned into summer range.

"Deer and elk can't exist on summer range alone so their population is away down and the federation is seriously concerned about it."

Mankelow said the 15,000-member federation sent a barrage of briefs to the former Social Credit administration but received little reaction.

No-Crack Eggs Coming?

TORONTO (CP) — Inventors may be trying to build a better mousetrap, but agriculture researchers are using mice to help build a crackless chicken egg.

The annual report of the Agriculture Research Institute of Ontario, tabled in the legislature, notes that five per cent of all eggs marketed in Canada are cracked, resulting in the loss of about $2 million a year.

Apparently, getting a red color in the apple is a perennial problem of the orchard keeper.

Growers, said the report, sometimes delay harvest so they can get a red apple but this results in overmature fruit.

Increase Fuel Study, U.S. Urged

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — A House of Representatives group says the United States must increase its spending on fuel research and development by $1 billion a year if future needs are to be met without a total dependence on oil imports.

The group also urged the establishment of a White House energy policy group and a single government agency to manage the many energy research programs in various departments.

The chairman of the House research and development subcommittee group, Mike McCormack (Dem.—Wash.) told a news conference that the additional money, supplied largely by the government, should be initially used for a crash program to develop an environmentally-acceptable, sulphur-free coal fuel.

McCormack said the $1.5 billion annually at present being spent on energy research is clearly inadequate.

Asked whether research on coal is being emphasized because of the increasing U.S. reliance on oil imports, McCormack said: "Yes, that plus the fact we are running out of domestic oil resources."

He said there is no apparent way for the U.S. to avoid importing large quantities of oil from the Middle East in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Even with an increased research program, alternate energy sources will not come into effect until the middle 1980s, he said.

In addition to coal, emphasis should be placed on research on solar energy, geothermal energy and nuclear reactors, he said.

The Navy Gets To the Bottom Of Things

HALIFAX (CP) — Join the navy and see the world, maybe even the bottom of Halifax harbor in mid-winter.

An armed forces spokesman here said that training for Atlantic Fleet divers goes on here year-round. And part of the training includes a daily three-mile swim in the harbor, winter or summer, in addition to underwater training.

The divers are expected to be able to dive under any conditions after graduation from the five-week course and in the Atlantic fleet that means getting used to frigid water.

The course includes training in such military roles as replacing propellers, maintaining sonar equipment and searching the hulls of warships for mines. But the divers also are trained to aid police in recovering drowning victims, disposing of explosives and recovering evidence.

SCHOOLING FEE: $390

Tuition fees for non-resident and over-age students attending a Greater Victoria school next year will be $390.

The figure, discussed at the school board's legal affairs committee Tuesday night, is $20 more than this year. It represents the school district's share of total per-pupil costs, which this year amount to $814.

Board secretary-treasurer Ernest Shaw said there are 53 non-resident and "a very few" over-age students in the district this year.

"When are we going to dispense with over-age student charge?" asked Trustee Daphne Temple.

Instruction-Curriculum director Vic Thompson said most over-age students are not charged tuition fees.

The fee must be given final approval of the board next week.

Board Eyes Own Data Processing

Greater Victoria school board will likely move a step further into the computer age this summer with installation of a computer terminal at the board's offices.

The board's business committee Tuesday night heard a report from Price Waterhouse Associates recommending installation of the remote job entry (RJE) as a "significant improvement both in the cost and efficiency of present data processing activity."

The committee made no decision on recommendations in the report.

Data processing is now done by contract with a private firm and in 1972 cost the board $82,100.

With a terminal at the school board, yearly operational costs would total $42,140, according to the report. Cost of setting up and converting the system is estimated at $9,047.

Besides a 50 per cent reduction in costs, the terminal will save school board employees from travelling back and forth to the data centre and, the report says, make the system more responsive to the board's deadlines.

Computer services are used in the school district payroll, in student timetabling and in all board finance accounts.

District suerintendent A. J. Longmore says installation of a terminal will definitely not mean greater use of computer services by the board.

It will also involve no staff changes, he said.

A Remcom 2780 terminal linked by a communication line to the IBM computer utility in Vancouver, is recommended by Price Waterhouse but, company representative Douglas Louth told the committee cost comparisons will be run against the computer unit at Simon Fraser University.

The report recommends that negotiations with Remcom Systems Ltd. and cost comparisons be completed by the first week in May to allow the facility to be installed during the summer.

It says conversion of board programs and files "can be demanding in respect of time" and urges that the programs be reviewed before conversion "with the objective of improving efficiency."

'Unfit' Annexes For Sale

Two portable classrooms were declared "unfit for educational purposes" at a Greater Victoria school board committee meeeting Tuesday night and then one was recommended for sale to the Greater Victoria Association for the Retarded.

The committee was told the portable annexes, located at Lampson and McKenzie elementary schools, were built in 1951 and are "in a run-down condition and are too expensive to repair and operate."

The structures are uninsulated and the heating system, according facilities and school support director Sig Dietze, is unsafe.

"We declare it (the portable) unfit and then we sell it?" Trustee Philip Ney asked.

Dietze said the Greater Victoria Association for the Retarded, who want the portable for a sheltered workshop, had viewed the annex and found it suitable for their purposes.

He said the association will use volunteers to renovate the building, which will be sold for the nominal charge of $1.

In a letter to Dietze, association executive-director S. F. Campbell-Sayers said the Winifred M. Clark workshop is filled and another activity centre is needed for mentally retarded and handicapped young people in the Langford-Colwood area.

Dietze said the school district will investigate the possibility of making the other portable available to a similar group.

Ottawa Urged To Inspect For Bombs

The provincial government has taken action in the wake of the deaths last Sunday of two Vernon boys who were killed when an old mortar shell exploded.

Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall sent a letter to James Richardson, minister of national defence, saying Premier Barrett and the government are "deeply shocked that this unfortunate incident could take place."

"The government of B.C. is concerned and apprehensive to learn that Second World War explosives are still present and unmarked in this province," the letter said.

"The government expects that you will immediately have all Second World War installations inspected thoroughly and made completely safe in order that no more war materials will create a danger or a hazard to the public."

The question was raised in the legislature Tuesday by Pat Jordan (SC—North Okanagan), who asked Barrett if he had taken action on her request to ask the federal government to inspect all armed forces installations for unexploded bombs.

Barrett told the house that any requests for compensation from the parents of the two boys "would receive the utmost consideration" from the government.

Defence Minister James Richardson said in the Commons Monday he will authorize an examination of a former munitions training range at Vernon if "new evidence" is produced showing that live explosives present a continuing danger.

Board Chief to Prod Province For View Royal Sewage Plans

The chairman of the metro health board said Tuesday he will personally attempt to find out what plans the provincial government has for putting sewers in View Royal.

If Ald. Ken Hill finds that the province is planning no action, the next step may be for the health board to take one or two of "the more serious offenders" to court, suggested Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread, the board's senior public health officer.

The board has written both Health Minister Dennis Cocke and Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer on the sewage problem in View Royal but has not received a reply.

HILL
. . . wants answer

Dye testing by the health board staff in the past has shown the majority of septic tank fields in the area can't absorb the volume of effluent passing through them. Effluent leaking into roadside ditches and into drainage systems have produced sporadic complaints for years.

The majority of View Royal residents have twice, in referendum votes, shown they are opposed to a sewer system, or at least to paying for it.

In other business, Hill said a committee has been struck to examine programs now undertaken by the health board staff and what programs might be undertaken if the board becomes a part of the Capital regional board.

Until that committee has reported, developments towards regionalization of the health board will remain confidential, he said.

He added it was hoped the changeover could be completed by the start of next year "although I said that a year ago too."

Dr. Whitbread noted that he has issued 192 permits and another 102 interim permits to eating places as required under new regulations which came into effect at the first of the month.

That leaves 73 eating establishments without permits yet and these are under consideration, he said.

In addition to ascertaining that eating places meet the new equipment and facilities standards, health inspectors must continue to make sure they function hygenically. Whitbread said one restaurant had been closed Tuesday morning for being "sloppy."

It will be re-inspected Thursday to see if it has been cleaned up sufficiently to reopen. Whitbread did not identify the restaurant.

Easter Monday Holiday

DUNCAN — Easter Monday will again be declared a holiday in Duncan despite the opposition of the Downtown Businessmen's Association, city council decided unanimously Monday evening.

The association wrote council several weeks ago saying it was not in favor of the holiday in the city.

However, the association does not speak for all Duncan business people, said Mrs. Percy Clements, who spoke for a delegation.

Councils original intention not to declare Easter Monday a holiday created much dissension among business people, she said.

Former alderman Hamish Mutter told council Easter Monday had been a holiday in Duncan for 60 years.

"Are you governed by the businessmen or the citizens?" Mutter asked. "I suggest that you carry on the custom of the past."

MAYOR QUITS

PORT HARDY — Mayor Jack Buller has resigned after just three and a half months in office.

Buller, who is also principal of Port Hardy Junior Secondary School, said today he felt "that the time available is not sufficient to carry out the full duties and responsibilities of mayor."

Buller was elected mayor by acclamation after serving two years as an alderman.

Discipline Worries Port Hardy Parents

PORT HARDY — A closed school board meeting on discipline in local schools became a public hearing last week when more than 20 parents crowded into the board office.

The parents expressed their concern over lack of discipline at Port Hardy Junior Secondary School and Robert Scott Elementary School, said Dave O'Connor, one of the parents who attended.

Noisy classrooms, bad language and threats of bullies were some of the problems raised, said two other parents, who wouldn't let their names be used.

The meeting had been called as a result of a complaint to superintendent Bob Heustis about discipline at the junior secondary school. The school board went into a private meeting after hearing the parents.

DOMAN DRIVERS RETURN TO JOB

DUNCAN — Sixty drivers at Doman's Transport returned to work Tuesday after a half-day work stoppage over an accumulation of grievances.

Jack Mumm, second vice-president of Local 1-80 of the International Woodworkers of America, said today there were 14 issues which the company had "promised to be cleared up and nothing was done."

"There was a real breakdown in communication between the junior foremen and the higher-ups."

Mumm said "all the problems that could be resolved were" at Tuesday's meeting and further meetings will be held to iron out other problems. Some of the issues, he said, were junior men working while senior men were off, and back pay.

CANADA'S CUP OF TEA

Canada Cup Reserve is a new 6 year old Canadian whisky.

It is made by Canadian Schenley.

Over the last 28 years Schenley has built a reputation on quality. So Schenley puts its name on the line every time that name goes on a bottle.

To simply call Canada Cup Reserve "Canadian" isn't enough for Schenley. It must measure up to their standards of a Canadian whisky. Smoothness, lightness and a rich Canadian taste.

Under the supervision of Schenley's master distiller, over 12 different blends were developed and put through extensive taste tests. Only 6 years-aged whiskies from hand charred white oak casks were tested.

Only men skilled in the distilling art made the decisions. This wasn't a popularity contest but a careful search for supreme quality. Schenley Canadian Quality.

Finally a blend was chosen, one that could truly bear the name — Canada Cup.

Try new Canada Cup Reserve. Sip it slowly as a taster would.

Reunion Could Bring Back Beatlemania

LONDON (CP) — The world of pop music may be in for another wave of Beatlemania as John, Paul, George and Ringo appear to be considering a Beatle revival.

There have been strong indications recently that the four have patched up their musical and business differences and, after following individual careers for more than three years, now are talking about a reunion.

Apple Corp., the group's pop music company formed four years ago, announced Monday that a secret album has been recorded of the four former Beatles in individual performances. Some of the album tracks feature three of the musicians working in different combinations although none features all four together.

This album has yet to be titled, but it is expected to be on sale this summer, Apple said.

QUITS COMPANY

The first sign that the Beatles—the foremost influence on pop music in the 1960s—may reform came last week when Allen Klein, the group's American millionaire manager, pulled out of Apple. Klein, who ran the group's business affairs through Apple for more than two years, had been a major stumbling block in the path of a possible Beatle reunion.

He caused a bitter dispute between Paul McCartney, who had wanted his father-in-law Lee Eastman to handle Apple, and the other three members of the group.

After Klein's announcement that he would not renew his contract with Apple, Eastman said there was a strong hope that the Beatles now could resolve their differences.

"The four of them want to work together," he said. "We have always had the broad outline of a plan to join forces again and I think the plan can now be put into operation."

McCartney said recently that "there were various reasons why the group split in the first place, but Klein was a major one."

MIGHT APPEAR LIVE

"But now, two years later and with Klein out of the way, the air is clearer," he said. "There's a good chance that we will record together again, both albums and singles, but nothing has been discussed at length."

McCartney added: "If we fancied it, and were in the right place at the right time, then we may appear on stage together. There is nothing to stop us now."

The other three members have been non-committal so far on the chances of a Beatles revival. John Lennon has said he is too busy fighting United States immigration officials to think about playing as a Beatle again.

Ringo Starr reports he's "optimistic," but he added: "All this doesn't mean we'll be playing together again tomorrow."

But speculation of a Beatles comeback has brought a flurry of offers from pop music entrepreneurs in Britain and the U.S.

In Britain, one promotional syndicate has offered Aintree Racecourse as a venue for the group's return debut concert.

Work-for-Welfare Again Suggested As Saanich Tackles Budget Cutting

A hard look at the concept of work-for-welfare benefits will be taken by Saanich council following a budget-cutting session Tuesday.

In the second of three scheduled meetings of council aimed at reducing a proposed 5.69 mill rise in the annual tax rate, aldermen took slightly more than one-third of a mill, or $51,700 worth of items from the $18.8 million budget.

Monday night just under one-third of a mill was taken out, making a total reduction so far of $100,200.

Ald. Leslie Passmore took aim for the second time at welfare recipients who will account for $2.02 million in disbursements by Saanich this year. It was noted Monday night that 10 per cent of the welfare roll are able-bodied and likely would work if offered a job.

Passmore, who said he sounded like "a broken record," suggested the 82 able-bodied persons getting welfare could be put to work at drainage maintenance, to cost an estimated $241,870 this year.

"I can't see a damn thing wrong with it," he said.

Ald. Frank Waring pointed out the apportionment is worked out a little differently and that Ottawa has the say over how benefits should be paid.

"We're not calling the shots," Mayor Hugh Curtis added.

"I know we're not," Passmore replied, "but when you have 82 individuals who are able bodied, can't we get them to just work?"

Curtis said a meeting with the provincial minister of social rehabilitation could be arranged, "but the work-for-welfare concept falls on deaf ears at the senior government level."

"I know, but why aren't we doing something about it?" Passmore rejoined.

Waring said there could be merit in going to the minister and aldermen agreed to resume discussions at the next regular meeting.

Council passed a $577,900 estimate for municipal garbage collection (plus $14,400 for contract collection at commercial buildings), but aldermen were disturbed by the figure, up $77,900 from last year and $115,000 from 1971.

"This is just a staggering amount," said Ald. Alan Newberry, recalling the days when council debated the private versus public system of garbage collection.

"It seems we've moved a long, long way from the lowest bid on contract prices," he said.

Ald. Edith Gunning said a close look should be given to the question of garbage after Ald. Fred Severson said it would be cheaper to require householders to place their garbage-filled containers at the foot of their driveways as is done in Vancouver and elsewhere.

Municipal administrator W. M. Tremayne said the engineering department is making a study of the garbage question.

"Quite frankly, it's an enormous expense," engineer Bob Daye said, noting the total $637,550 for garbage collection, disposal and boulevard litter cleanup amounts to about $10 per capita.

Passmore said many municipalities had gone back to contract garbage collection and were saving "millions."

Curtis said the Saanich system was smooth-running, if expensive, with few complaints.

Transportation maintenance items were hit by $13,800 in cutbacks out of $16,800 total public works reductions, including roadside maintenance such as waste paper removal.

"We are losing the litter battle," Curtis remarked, notwithstanding efforts made by anti-litter organizations, school children and government. "Litter is on the increase again," it can be seen with a casual look around any mailbox, street corner or school, he said.

"You wonder if anyone has put anything in a litter bin or ashtray for months."

The engineer was encouraged to look into providing less attractive, sturdier street receptacles after reporting his discouragement over litter baskets.

He said 25 new aluminum baskets were set out in the Gorge beautifucation project.

"About 75 per cent of them were kicked to death. I'm almost ready to go back to 45-gallon steel drums," Daye said.

Moving on to a $42,400 item for signs and barricades, Curtis noted Saanich was "suffering very badly from vandalism here." Daye said it cost about $25 to replace each sign.

The item was reduced to $40,000.

Vandalism on traffic signals, a $6,760 item in the budget, was "abnormally low," Daye said.

Parks suffered the largest cutback, a total of $34,900 in both maintenance and capital items, nearly a third represented in Cedar Hill golf course equipment, labor and improvements.

Planning estimates totalling $179,575 went through unscathed.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Edward Dye, 26, of 10A-820 Fisgard, received a suspended sentence and two years' probation from Judge William Ostler for possession of an offensive weapon.

Dye was stopped in the 900-block View at 12:15 a.m. on March 14. Tucked in the back of his trousers was a carving knife with an eight-inch blade.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said Dye told police he was expecting "a hassle" with some people. He was on his way home when stopped.

He said he had only grade eight education and wanted to take an upgrading course through Manpower.

"You don't want to be in trouble with the law all your life do you?" asked Ostler. "You know by this time if you look for trouble you're sure to find it. You've found it before.

"I don't want to send you to jail in spite of your record. I'm going to give you a chance on probation. That's something you have not had.

"It must be made perfectly clear to you, Mr. Dye, that this is your last chance with this court."

As a probationary condition Dye was ordered not to own or carry an offensive weapon.

Hesketh, 54, of an unknown address, had been released only a few hours Monday when he was arrested on the lot at Advance Collision, 741 Pembroke, drinking from a wine bottle.

He was charged again with causing a disturbance by being drunk.

Macintyre read a portion of his previous convictions of the same offence: March 31, '73 — 10 days; March 26, '73 — 5 days; March 15, '73 — fined $25; Feb. 2, '73 — fined $15.

"I just got out yesterday," said Hesketh. "I'm losing everything. I try, I really try."

He asked Ostler for a fine so he could pay it and leave town.

"You can't run away from yourself," said the judge. "If you don't do something about it, and I mean something constructive like going to Alcoholics Anonymous, you're going to spend the rest of your time in jail."

John Douglas Craig McTavish, 32, of 5-614 Esquimalt was fined $250 by Judge F. S. Green for stealing an electric heater, worth $40, from Eaton's Jan. 22.

Bill No Catch-All For Merger

Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer Tuesday introduced legislation which would push through the amalgamation of Kamloops and Kelowna with their respective suburbs.

But later, in talking to reporters, Lorimer stressed that the bill relates only to those specific mergers and is not intended as a catch-all piece of legislation to open the way for several similar moves in other parts of the province.

Lorimer said other amalgamations — a possible example was the electoral areas on the fringes of Greater Victoria — would only be brought forward by the provincial government under "very exceptional" circumstances and as such they would require separate bills to ensure proper discussion by the legislature.

The minister denied that Tuesday's bill (amendments to the Municipalities Enabling and Validating Act) was a means of circumventing a recent B.C. Supreme Court ruling that he could not order the Kamloops and Kelowna area amalgamations without a vote.

"It's just saying what I said we would do last December," he said.

The bill empowers the cabinet to dissolve the present municipal structures in the two areas and order any boundary extensions or amalgamations it considers necessary.

Lorimer said interim councils will be set up May 1 and voting for the new councils will take place some time in June.

Laser Beams Used to Treat Blindness

WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — A daring new laser-beam method of treating glaucoma, second leading cause of blindness, was reported this week by a noted Soviet eye surgeon.

Dr. Carl Kupfer, director of the National Eye Institute at the National Institutes of Health, called the news "highly encouraging" and described Russian Dr. Michael M. Krasnov as a world leader in glaucoma surgery.

Before a fascinated group of reporters, Krasnov, 43, told of directing the ruby-red laser beam at his own eyes and those of his colleagues before treating any patients.

Lasers have long been used to treat some other eye diseases, especially detached retina where the laser beam's heat is used to re-weld torn parts of the retina — the image-recorder at the back of the eye ball.

But the fierce heat that does this re-welding is exactly the wrong tool in glaucoma, where the tissues to be repaired are inflamed and scarred by such over-kill.

For a better way, Krasnov consulted Soviet physicist Alexsander M. Prokhorov, who in 1964 was a co-winner of the Nobel Prize with American Charles Townes for the laser's development.

Prokhorov suggested the Q-switched ruby laser. "Q" in electronics stands for "quality factor," and the Q-laser shoots a highly powerful but very short, well-controlled beam of amplified light — red-colored like a ruby — at its target.

Each burst lasts only about a billionth of a second, long enough to do the repair, too short to heat up or burn.

Glaucoma is a disease in which the aqueous humor, the fluid which always flows through the front of the eye to wash and nourish the cornea and lens, becomes trapped. The result is a damaging increase in pressure inside the whole eyeball, and soon damage to the optic nerve.

Doctors first try drugs to relieve the pressure. They also try surgery, most recently microsurgery with the help of a microscope, to reopen the clogged channels that are trapping the fluid.

This often works. But at best, Krasnov said, surgery is time-consuming and costly and often causes complications.

What he does with the Q-switched laser instead is direct 10 to 12 bursts to make what he calls "laseropunctures" to clear out the clogged channels. This is done in his office in about 10 minutes per patient.

He has had 94 patients dating back to 1969 and has achieved good results in 88 of them, he said. He has had to resort to surgery only in six.

He does have to repeat the treatment periodically — every two months in some patients, but only every seven or eight months in others.

What this means, he explained, is that the average patient "might have to have a treatment every six months. But this is very simple compared to surgery and should be much less expensive."

Dr. Krasnov spoke at a news conference arranged by Patent Management Inc. of Washington, which is importing the patents and other information for any U.S. firms who want to make the laser system.

Dr. Kupfer at the National Eye Institute commented that "we still can't cure glaucoma" but with these methods "we can control it" if it is caught early.

It generally starts without warning, he added. Thus, everyone over 35 or 40 should have his eyes checked yearly if glaucoma runs in his family. Everyone over 45 should have his eyes checked every two or three years whether there has been glaucoma in the family or not.

PETICARE URGED

The mention of medical insurance for pets was once good for a chuckle, but with two purebred, well-trained German shepherds and mounting veterinary bills, Mr. Allcorn is talking seriously about animal medical care.

"It's about time somebody started a health care program for dogs, cats and small animals."

Participation in a peticare scheme would be voluntary, and Mr. Allcorn suggested an annual fee of $50 for dogs, with scaled-down prices for cats and smaller pets.

Nuclear Ban Failure 'Deplorable'

GENEVA (UPI) — Japan said Tuesday it was deplorable that the United States and the Soviet Union have failed to progress towards a comprehensive nuclear test ban 10 years after a partial treaty outlawing all but underground explosions.

Masahiro Nisibori, the Japanese negotiator at the 25-nation disarmament conference, said both political and technological conditions now prevail to permit agreement on a total ban.

"In spite of these improvements," he said, "not only have the differences of views over the comprehensive test ban between the United States and the Soviet Union not been narrowed, but also the positions of the two countries even seem to have hardened from those of a decade ago and I cannot but comment that this is deplorable."

The U.S. continues to maintain that on-site inspections are required to adequately verify a ban on all nuclear tests.

The Soviet Union, which argues that such inspections would amount to legalized espionage, maintains that national means of detection with seismological instruments is sufficient for verification.

Nisibori called for an early series of informal meetings between nuclear experts so that the U.S. and Soviet Union can supply technical evidence to back up their respective positions.

He said the meetings should begin in July and centre on three questions:

- The extent to which underground explosions can be detected and identified by national means as suggested by Moscow;
- A technical view of the on-site inspections proposed by Washington;
- Whether on-site inspection continues to be a technically indispensable factor or not.

Gypsies Badly Treated

By MARK MEREDITH

LONDON (Reuter) — Europe's four million gypsies are confronted with neglect, misunderstanding, social prejudice and outright police harassment, says a report published here.

Their trailers are banned or kept on the move, their children are growing up illiterate and they are forced to live in conditions of squalor, says the study by the London-based Minority Rights Group.

Author Grattan Puxon, joint secretary-general of the World Romany Congress, opposes government efforts to assimilate gypsies and urges recognition of their rights as a nationality and as human beings.

"Post-war years of neglect and persecution continue to take their toll in health and lives," the report says. It warns that with a birthrate of two to more than three per cent annually, the sheer weight of the gypsy population is "compelling adjustment in official policy."

There may be 10 million gypsies by 1980, Puxon says in the study.

FORCED TO MOVE

Gypsies are basically self-employed and economic considerations account in part for their frequent movement, "but an appreciable amount results from being moved on by officials."

Authorities in France have bulldozed the houses of gypsies and 90 per cent of the gypsy children there are illiterate, the report says.

Police in Belgium have instructions to prevent any nomadic gypsies from crossing the frontiers and in Spain gasoline was used to burn huts in a gypsy encampment at Barcelona to improve the landscape for tourists, Puxon reports.

The study adds that many European countries provide insufficient and unsanitary trailer sites on wasteland next to garbage dumps although the Netherlands and the British government have started programs to set up camps.

The Nordic climate, which forces many gypsies to accept permanent warm housing in Scandinavia, has led gypsies there furthest down the road to assimilation. Puxon says assimilation corrodes the identity of the gypsies and "creeping assimilation soon becomes a galloping rot."

'It's a Man's World' Soon Truth?

Male-Child-Only Birth Pill Has Ready Market—Scientist

LONDON (WP) — Control of population through a "male child only" pill would have the greatest chance of success, says professor John Postgate of Sussex University in the current issue of New Scientist.

He argues that social instability and starvation are not matters of the future but are with us now, and suggests that conventional approaches to birth control have no hope of succeeding in those parts of the world where they are most needed.

Since over-all fertility depends largely on the proportion of females, a rapid transition to a female minority would be the fastest route to reducing population growth.

"There is a surprising prejudice among ordinary people in favor of having male children. Among most African, Asian, and Central and South American peoples this prejudice amounts almost to an obsession," says Postgate. "Millions would leap at the opportunity to breed male. No compulsion or even propaganda would be necessary."

If a selective fertilization pill assured 90 per cent male births, male domonation and population decline would ensue fairly rapidly. The rate of decline would depend on how quickly ordinary people recognized the cause of decline, and would be halted when it was realized that ultimate stability at some desired level required the breeding of a larger proportion of females.

Postgate says nothing about likely female reaction to his plan — which, at the present time, is purely theoretical because there is no such magic pill. But he suggests that the transitional phase, during which males were dominant by between 5:1 and 50:1 women might need to be restricted and protected by taboos, subjected to polandry, or treated like queen ants.

It is not beyond scientific ingenuity to develop a selective pill. "There are many approaches to the problem," says Postgate. "The important thing is to recognize its urgency."

● A new birth control pill, which could halve the risk of death to women taking it, is being tested. Sir Richard Doll, professor of medicine at Oxford University, reporting this to a conference of the Royal College of General Practitioners in London last week, said it might become available "shortly." The new pill contains only 30 millionths of a gram of the hormone estrogen, the active contraceptive ingredient which has been linked with deaths caused by blood clotting.

● A survey of British women has shown that only a minority use the pill and they are generally women who are more ready to take a risk, the conference was told. "Women who take the pill are more likely to smoke cigarettes than women who don't," said Dr. Clifford Kay, the Manchester doctor in charge of the survey. "It might seem, therefore, that women on the pill are more likely to disregard the health risks of smoking and the smaller health risks of the pill."

THIRD TIME LUCKY after three attempts to act as her own lawyer, schoolteacher Sharyn Calub, 26, of Tampa, Fla., finally won her divorce using a $15.60 undo-it-yourself kit. "I owe it all to determination," said the happy third grade teacher, as she received a congratulatory hug from her mom, Mrs. Alice Israel. "I saved $300 in lawyers fees."

Cheap Divorce 'Not Realistic'

TORONTO (CP)—A Toronto lawyer said Friday that the public's demand for "cheap, simplified divorces" is unrealistic because a divorce "is the most critical moment in the life of an average person."

W. David Griffiths was speaking at a panel discussion at the spring meeting of the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association. The discussion concerned controlling the price of legal advice.

Griffiths said a person seeking a divorce needs independent legal advice about such matters as alimony, custody of children and maintenance.

"This cannot be done in an expeditious, simple manner," he said.

He also said that middle-class persons need some form of prepaid legal insurance plan so they can afford legal help. Ontario's Legal Aid Plan has served the poor adequately, and the rich can pay for any help they need.

A prepaid legal insurance plan, where contributions are deducted weekly from members' pay cheques, is under consideration by the Law Society of Upper Canada.

Cranberry Glass Joins Treen as Curio to Hunt

elizabeth forbes

It's a month now since I shared with you some facts about treen (wooden articles made and used by our pioneers). And from calls and letters received, I judge you enjoyed that column.

Therefore, I am now going to tell you some facts about cranberry glass, as I learned them at a second meeting of the University Women's Club study group on Canadiana.

Mrs. R. B. Godfrey, who is, in her own words "a modest collector," told us cranberry is really a popular name for this ware.

The glass originated in the eastern United States and first came into Canada, it is thought, (particularly the Maritimes and what is how Ontario) with the United Empire Loyalists.

It was the addition of gold to the formula, that gave the glass its characteristic color and appearance.

Gold also added to the original cost and no doubt "was partly responsible for the many small, even miniature pieces" collectors discover from time to time.

The gold in itself became a temptation. Some early workers made a point of scraping what they could from the bottoms of various pieces before the glass had really hardened.

"One record shows that as much as $35 worth of the precious metal was recovered in this way from the bottom of a pitcher."

To give something of the history of cranberry glass Mrs. Godfrey went back to 1679 when Johann Kunckle, under the patronage of Brandenburg's Emperor Frederick William, invented a new process named "ruby glass," by adding gold chloride to a basic formula.

"It was subject to decay," she said, "and the few pieces around today are considered rare and precious."

In 1689 there came a new formula, the Potsdam. "It was found to be much more durable."

Some time later, Wister, who had immigrated to America to manufacture brass buttons, saw the potential for glass. He brought over workers from Potsdam and started a factory near Philadelphia. And it was from experiments there and in the Boston and Sandwich and New England glass companies, that cranberry ware evolved.

In 1880, Louis Comfort Tiffany, patented "Favrille" — a cranberry glass with a metallic lustred irridescent surface — produced by exposure to fumes in a closed chamber. Those pieces all bore a finely etched signature under the foot or base. "They are valued into the thousands today."

The art of enamelling on glass also contributed to the interest and variety of cranberry, Mrs. Godfrey said.

Most famous of the enamellers was a man named Moser. He invented many colored paints and his designs used multi-colored leaves, lacy green foliage, finely drawn butterflies and insects; also fine gold leaf scrolls and tracings.

Another popular glass enameller wase Mary Gregory, who worked all her life with the Boston and Sandwich company.

She copied the child poses of Kate Greenaway and the European pastoral scenes of Chalot. And she earned about two dollars a week for her work.

For instance, a water pitcher might have an inverted thumbprint somewhere around its edge. Certain pieces could be in crackle glass effect, others in what is called cranberry swirl.

There are bowls with ruffled edges, decanters with panelled sides and all manner and types of miniatures "if you can find them."

All of which leads me, once again, to suggest you take a look in those old trunks and boxes in your storage rooms and attics.

You just might have a Mary Gregory original (many of hers are miniatures), or a vase, a jewelry box or a jug in cranberry glass that once belonged to your grandmother.

Hold any one of these to the light and see the gleam of gold near the base. But don't try to scrape it off. You'll break that precious antique.

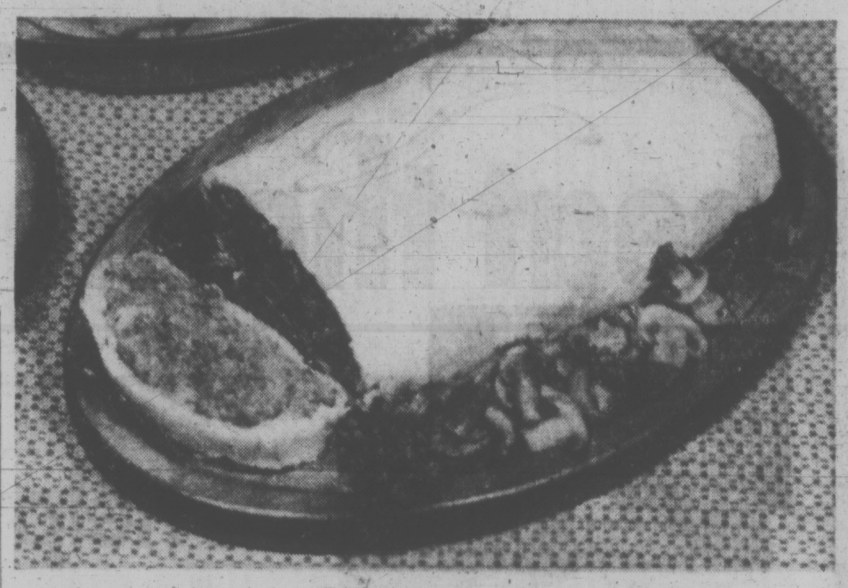
ANY WAY you shape it, minced beef can be transformed into dozens of interesting dishes. Beef pastry roll combines minced beef with a variety of vegetables and spices, shaped into a roll and then wrapped in a tender pastry crust. Ground beef may come from a variety of cuts. Ask your butcher to specify what cuts he has used.



Minced Beef In Pastry Easily Made

The list of dishes which can be prepared with ground beef is long and interesting. Whether you use it to stretch the family food budget or dress it up for company, the results are usually delicious.

Because the meat is ground, such things as bread crumbs, oatmeal or cereal flakes may be added to it to make it go further. Any number of herbs, spices, sauces and vegetables will add zest to minced beef. The shape of the meat may also be varied. You can form it into meatballs, loaves or patties of any size.

In order to have success with your minced beef dishes, choose and store the meat with care. Minced beef may come from a variety of beef cuts. If it is cut from the shank, flank, neck or from trimmings, it is called "hamburger". According to federal food and drug regulations it must not contain more than 30 per cent fat and if it is labelled "lean" it must not contain more than 15 per cent fat.

Because fat will cook out and represent a loss, lean minced beef usually provides more servings per pound than hamburger. "Minced chuck" or "minced round" come from the chuck or round respectively.

Minced beef is more perishable than a whole cut of beef — it dries out faster and acquires an off-flavor on standing. Plan to use it within a day or freeze it if you wish to keep it for a period of two to three months. To store fresh ground beef, wrap it loosely in waxed paper and refrigerate it at once. For freezing, wrap the meat tightly in moisture-vapor proof material.

Here is a recipe for Beef Pastry Roll, a flavorful meat roll wrapped in pastry. It is easy to prepare and is worthy of enthusiastic approval of family or guests.

BEEF PASTRY ROLL

1½ pounds minced beef
¾ cup quick-cooking oats
⅓ cup chopped onion
⅓ cup diced celery
¼ cup shredded carrot
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
½ teaspoon oregano
1 teaspoon curry powder
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 egg, beaten.
¼ cup chili sauce
½ cup tomato juice
Pastry for 2-crust pie.

Mix meat, oats, vegetables and seasonings. Combine egg; chili sauce and tomato juice. Add to meat and mix thoroughly. Shape mixture into a roll 9-inch long.

Roll pastry out to a rectangle about 14x12 inches. Place meat roll in centre and fold pastry over. Seal edge, leaving ends open. Place seam side down on shallow baking pan. Bake in a 450-degree F. oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 350-degrees F. and continue baking until golden brown, about 50 minutes more. Six servings.

Widows, Fear Not

DEAR ABBY: Have I got a problem? I am stunned. My wife went to another state to attend our great-granddaughter's graduation. I told her I'd stay home and keep myself busy dating some of the lonely widows in our church. She said it was okay with her.

Well, I called one up and asked her for a dinner date, and she said yes. The next morning she telephoned so early she woke me up to say she had changed her mind, and what kind of woman did I think she was, anyway?

Abby, she is a member of our Sisterhood, and I am a member of the Brotherhood, and there is certainly nothing wrong with a brother taking a sister out for dinner, is there?

She sounded scared to death: And at my age yet. I am over 80. I honestly wish she had something to be afraid of. I assure you she hasn't. She nor anybody else. — Rebuked in Sun City

DEAR REBUKED: Never mind you. How old is she?

DEAR ABBY: My name is Annie and I am 12 years old. My mother died when I was eight, and I had no daddy either. No one wanted to give me a home, not a soul, except one lady who came to my mother's funeral. She was very nice to me and asked me to come and live with her.

I stayed with her for a year, and she treated me very mean. I had to wash clothes at night, and take care of six littler kids all day. If I complained, she beat me with a leather strap. Once she got me ready to send me to an orphans' home, but I heard it was like a jail there so I got down on my hands and knees and begged her to keep me asd raise me, so she let me stay.

This lady kept me out of school so much to help with the other kids, my teacher sent for her and said if I was absent one more time she would have to hold me back, so this lady said, "Leave her back," then she purposely made me stay home from school again, and now the teacher is going to leave me back.

Oh, Abby, by the help of the Lord Almighty, I don't know what I am going to do now. Please tell your readers if their mother and father die, don't pick the person who pretends to be the best person at the funeral to live with or else they will end up being treated like a dog. What shall I do? — Annie

DEAR ANNIE: I want to help you, but you did not sign your last name, neither did you give me an address. No child has to be treated like a dog. Please tell me how to get in touch with you.

DEAR ABBY: While reading your column I came across the letter from NOT SO DUMB, who puts all her "white elephant" gifts in a box and gives them to others on gift-giving occasions.

Last Christmas, Abby, something very nice happened around our office. One of the girls heard of a sorority that collected body powder, colognes, wallets, scarves (wrong color) etc., things that people had received as gifts and couldn't use or didn't want. This sorority distributed these items to rest homes for the older residents who were forgotten by friends and family. The recipients LOVED each gift. Nice idea? — Happy Donor

DEAR DONOR: Nicer than nice! I hope it's contagious.

Former home of military officers, Maritime Museum

Arts Centre Goal Revived

Team Tackles Signal Hill Rot

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Three turn-of-the-century military buildings on Signal Hill in Esquimalt are getting a facelift this spring.

Project Signal Hill, a six-member Local Initiatives Project, is using its $8,500 federal grant to restore the brick buildings, which for 10 years housed the Maritime Museum.

Their goal is to create an artistic centre which not only provides cheap studio space for struggling artists but also serves the community.

Painting window frames, rebuilding rotting doors and re-installing old fireboxes have been the first order of business for the six workers.

Two big jobs — repairing the slate roofs and insulating the buildings — remain to be tackled. The roofing especially is a costly job, and the LIP grant provides money only for salaries, not for materials.

"The roof's going to be a really serious problem," said Bob Batty, a 30-year-old architecture graduate who is project manager.

The department of national defence, which has owned the Signal Hill buildings since their early days as military officers' quarters, has offered to provide asphalt roofing, but Batty is determined to find the money to repair the original slate roof.

Batty and two of his LIP workers, Gail Bigsby and Bill Featherstone, are members of a group of artists who have rented the buildings for a nominal sum since 1969.

Called the Greater Victlria Creative Centres Organization (Signal Hill), the group was formed when rumors arose that the defence department was considering tearing the buildings down.

The buildings had fallen into disuse after the Maritime Museum was moved to its downtown location in 1965. Vandals ransacked them, stealing almost everything in them, including most of the original brass door latches.

The Creative Centres Organization (CCO) started off with high hopes back in 1969. They provided studio space to artists of all kinds — painters, sculptors, film makers, writers — at low rents of $15 or $20 a month, just enough to cover the heating bills. They also opened an art gallery.

"But the initial enthusiasm by last May had worn thin," Batty said.

The CCO had no money to make the repairs the buildings needed, and most of the artists in the group weren't interested in restoring them. The gallery ementually folded.

"We sort of had to pull it up by its bootstraps," said Bigsby, a 24-year-old painter. That's what the LIP grant is for, not only to repair the buildings but to give the CCO a new lease on life.

The LIP workers and the CCO executive are trying to establish good relations with their defence department landlords and to patch over the internal squabbles among their artist-members.

"It is very difficult to put on a solid front, but that's what we're trying to attain," said Bigsby.

An annual meeting of the CCO has been called for Thursday evening in an effort to give some impetus to the group. Repairs on the three buildings are due to be completed by May 31, and Batty and his co-workers have big plans for the centre.

He's hoping to have a membership party the first two days in June, to be followed by an open house lasting two weeks. The Signal Hill Art Gallery could be re-opened, and possibly even a patio could be built outside overlooking the dockyard of CFB Esquimalt.

Bigsby would like to see the smallest of the three buildings left available for local community groups to use, rather than remain as artists' studios.

"That would be our foot in the community," she said.

Tuned Out TV Tots Can't Tune Back In

SEATTLE, Wash (UPI) — Some children who don't listen in school may have spent their infancy falling asleep to soap operas, the six o'clock news and Johnny Carson.

But is wasn't sad stories, bad news or tired jokes that turned them off. What happened, theorizes Dr. Kathry Barnard, was that as infants they learned to block out a bombardment of sound so they could fall asleep. As children they never quite tuned back in.

The process is onlyone of dozens Dr. Barnard is explor ing for the National Institute of Health's Division of Nursing, to find out how environmental differences affect learning.

No Measure

So far, preliminary work shows environmental differences are so important in learning that children from some environments do worse in school than even some brain-damaged children.

Nonetheless, although scales exist for measuring what babies can do, there is no standardized measure for infant environment.

So Dr. Barnard set out to develop one. She knew that the children of poorly educated parents usually did poorly in school, while the children of highly educated parents usually did well there. And highly educated parents were generally also the ones with the money.

Such broad indicators told her little about how parents raised their babies. To find out more about the specifics of baby learning, she decided to videotape mothers with their babies.

Borrowing her approach from research done over the last 10 years, Dr. Barnard asked mothers to teach their babies tasks just beyond the children's achievement levels. Each lesson was recorded behind a one-way mirror.

Taping Known

The mothers knew they were being taped, but the mirror prevented intrusions by technicians and equipment on mothers and children.

The researchers studied the tapes with great care, sometimes spending up to eight hours viewing and re-viewing a single segment.

But all work since the study started in July, 1971 has been preliminary to the major undertaking that begins this spring. Dr. Barnard and her associates will follow 200 children from birth until at least the age of six.

Dr. Barnard will attempt to predict how each of the 200 infants will do as school children.

Dr. Barnard believes from her work so far that "we can find out more from listening to parents than by examining a child. Parents know if their children have a problem."

Trouble Foreseen

Listening to parents is exactly what Dr. Barnard's team plans to do, but as a control the babies will also be given development tests and be examined by a pediatrician. Dr. Barnard believes she'll be able to catch problems like mental retardation long before the pediatrician finds them.

For example, it would not be a doctor but a parent who notices that a baby prefers to learn by tasting and touching instead of by seeing and hearing. If questions catch that tendancy, parents can be warned that trouble may lie ahead, because school learning of course depends on what a child sees and hears.

It's important to catch such tendencies young because, according to French child specialist Jean Piaget, a child learns the process of taking in information by the age of two.

Scale Planned

If the study confirms Dr. Barrard's work so far, she'll compile her questions into a scale for parents. The parenting scale will reveal any problems the baby might have and pinpoint environmental problems.

Someone has to interpret the scale to parents once it's given, and Dr. Barnard believes that someone should be a nurse.

"Nurses are concerned with the nitty gritty problems," said Dr. Barnard, herself a professor of nursing at the University of Washington. "What other professional is concerned with teaching a mother how to bathe her baby?"

Soaring Meat Prices Clear Table for Variety Cuts

By EDITH VANOCUR
Washington Post

As the price of meat has been going up, packages of variety meats, such as pigs feet, hearts, tripe and even packages of just plain suet, have appeared in supermarkets.

The European housewife has long made good use of almost every part of the domestic animal. Even pigs' blood is made into "black pudding" in England and into "boudin" in France (both are blood sausages). Now it is our turn to use these, the most nourishing of all cuts of meat, and add real variety to our menus.

Variety meats are to be recommended. Most are still not expensive. When properly cooked they are delicious and they are rich in vitamin B complex.

(Vitamin B, however, is soluble in cold water. To preserve as much of the vitamin as possible, these meats should not soak in water, nor shoujd salt be added until after they have been cooked.)

Because many cooks are not familiar with these meats, here are some pointers and recipes that may be of help.

Hearts: This is the most muscular of the variety meats and the nearest in texture to "muscle" meat. Requires long cooking at low temperatures.

Tripe, chitterlings: Prepared from the muscular inner lining of the stomach and the large intestine. Requires long cooking over low heat.

Brains: Should be pinkish grey. Very delicate in flavor, but high is cholesterol. Veal brains weigh about a half pound each. Lamb and pork brains less and beef more. None of them take much time to cook.

Sweetbreads: Are from the thymus gland. Veal sweetbreads in particular are a great delicacy. They weigh about 1½ pounds in t young calf and decrease in weight as the calf grows. They come in pairs, but often are sold singly.

Liver: Liver is a tender meat, that does not require much cooking. Veal liver is considered the best, but is expensive. Beef and pork liver have a stronger taste, but will taste milder after a soaking in milk.

BOILED PIG'S TROTTERS
(Serves 4)

Pig's trotters (or feet) are very gelatinous and take a long time to simmer. But they are worth the time they take. Pig's trotters may be halved lengthwise, if they are to be served with vinaigrette, or with a sauce piquant, or if they are to be rolled in breadcrumbs and broiled. They must be left whole to be stuffed. To keep their shape, they should be tied to splints. In all cases, they must be boiled first.

- 4 pig's trotters
- 2 wooden sticks for splints (I use 2 short rulers)
- 4 strips bacon
- 2 carrots
- 2 onions, peeled and each stuck with 2 cloves
- 2 ribs celery and their leaves
- 2 bay leaves
- 4 sprigs parsley
- 12 peppercorns
- 1 cup dry white wine
- ½ cup red or white wine vinegar
- salt

Singe, wash and scrape the trotters. Tie two whole trotters or two halves to each stick. Place these in a pan with cold water to cover. Add the rest of the ingredients and bring to a boil. Cover tightly, turn down the heat and simmer for about six hours or until done. Add more water if necessary. Trotters may then be eaten as is with a sauce. Or they can be boned and stuffed or cooked further following any of the above suggestions.

The bouillon can be frozen and used again to cook aditional trotters.

ROASTED BEEF LIVER
(Serves 6 to 8)

- 3 pounds beef liver, in one piece (must be requested from butcher)
- milk
- 2 thick slices salt pork, cut into lardons
- 6 to 8 slices bacon
- 2 large onions, sliced
- 1½ cups dry red wine, stock or bouillon
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 2 tablespoons butter
- Salt and freshly ground pepper

Have the butcher skin and trim the liver. Cover with milk and soak for 2 to 3 hours. Discard the milk and pat the liver dry. Lard it with salt pork. Line the bottom of the casserole with bacon strips. Add half of the onion slices. Place the liver on the bed of onions and cover with the remaining onions.

Add the wine or stock, or a mixture of both, and bake uncovered in a 350-degree oven until almost done. Exact time will depend on how thick the liver is, but allow about 1 hour. Baste at least twice. Just before the liver is done (still slightly pink in the centre), combine flour and butter and add this mixture to the sauce in the casserole in small pieces. Stir each piece in well before adding the next, continuing until sauce has thickened. Add salt and pepper before serving.

BROILED LAMB KIDNEYS
(Serves 2)

- 4 to 6 lamb kidneys
- Melted butter
- Spicy mustard
- Salt and pepper

Cut away the outer membrane from the kidney. Halve lengthwise and cut away excess fat. Brush with butter and mustard to taste. Place under preheated broiler so kidneys are 2 inches from source of heat and cook for 3 minutes on each side. Add salt and pepper after cooking.

LAMB KIDNEYS IN DISGUISE
(For one person)

- 1 lamb kidney, broiled as above
- 1 large baking potato

Cut the top third from the length of the potato. Hollow out the larger half of the potato enough to insert the kidney. Replace the top of the potato and secure with toothpicks. Bake at 400 degrees until the potato is cooked, about 50 minutes. Serve with melted butter and spicy mustard.

LAMB OR PORK HEARTS
(Serves 4)

- 6 slices bacon, cut in 1-inch pieces
- 4 hearts, trimmed of excess fat and gristle
- Flour
- 16 small onions
- 1 cup brown stock or bouillon
- 1 cup dry red wine
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- Grated rind and juice of one orange
- 1 tablespoon orange marmalade
- 2 ounces brandy (optional)
- Salt and pepper

Render the bacon in a large skillet. Remove bacon, drain and reserve. Dry the hearts and dust well with flour. Brown in the hot bacon fat on all sides. Transfer to a casserole.

Brown onions in the same fat and transfer them to the casserole. Deglaze the skillet with stock. Add this, reserved bacon and all other ingredients except the brandy to the casserole. Stir then bake covered for 1½ hours, at 350 degrees or until hearts are tender. Test with a knife point. Add brandy, uncover and cook at 450 degrees for the last 10 minutes. Slice the hearts and serve hot with their sauce.

Japan's Top Beef: $34.50 Per Pound

By DON OBERDORFER

TOKYO (WP) — Yoji Minakami, the proprietor of our neighborhood butcher shop, was a little bit puzzled by the news that angry housewives were staging a meat boycott in the U.S. and Canada.

For one thing, most Japanese housewives are too polite and too resigned to the inexorable workings of the system to protest rising prices. For another, his prices are three to six times higher than the ones causing the furor in North America.

The 32-year-old butcher inherited the shop from his father, who established it in the 1920s, and in recent months he has seen meat prices in Tokyo rise higher, higher, higher — far beyond the level that anyone dreamed of in bygone days.

At the Minakami shop, the best grade of sirloin, gleaming like a red jewel in the showcase, was selling for 600 yen per hundred grams or $1050 per pound at current exchange rates.

"Today's best buy," in the place of honor at the corner of the showcase, was boneless rib steak selling for a mere $5 per pound. Boneless roast was $6.90 per pound, which comes out to slightly more than $27 for a four-pound roast.

The least expensive grade of ground beef was $2.60 per pound, or about 15 cents for a small meatball.

Minakami-San's store is a neighborhood shop in one of Tokyo's more affluent districts, but prices are substantially below those of the highest level establishments catering to the Tokyo equivalent of the carriage trade.

The top of the top is the superspecial cut at Mitsukoshi, one of Tokyo's best department stores. There the meat department in the basement was selling its best grade of beef at 2,000 yen per hundred grams — or $34.50 per pound. An NBC television correspondent who visited the place with his film crew this week reported that pure silver was somewhat cheaper.

At the end of several hours of research in butcher shops, my wife Laura found a bargain — frozen sliced beef on sale at Mitsukoshi from the store's own ranch in New Zealand. It was selling for only $1.60 per pound. She used almost two-thirds of a pound, combined with tofu (soybean curd), Chinese cabbage, spring onions and mushrooms in seasoned broth, to feed our family of four a Japanese dish known as Shabu-shabu. A bowl of rice, the staff of life in this country, rounded out the dinner.

Minimum Wage Hike Proposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Nixon administration proposed Tuesday to raise the U.S. federal minimum wage from $1.60 to $2.30 over a three-year period. This is more than administration backers in Congress have sought, but less than some Democrats have asked.

U.S. Labor Secretary Peter J. Brennan presentd the administration proposal before a House labor subcommittee.

Roof Swoop Foils Extortion Bid

EDMONTON (CP) — Police foiled a $50,000 extortion plot against a city doctor when they dropped from the roof of the payoff location and arrested a man.

Police said they were hiding in the basement ceiling of a downtown motel where the money was to be exchanged. The suspect had an eight-inch butcher knife, but was disarmed by police.

Authorities said the doctor, whose identity has not been revealed, received a typed letter in the mail last Friday.

The letter threatened his life unless he deposited $50,000 in used bills in a refrigerator in the basement kitchen of the motel.

The doctor received another letter Monday, reminding him not to contact police. However, he told police about the letters and they made preparations to hide in a narrow crawl space in the ceiling of the basement.

The money was dropped in the refrigerator and 30 minutes later a man took the money and placed it in a locker room in the basement.

Three hours later, the man returned and took the money to a nearby room where he barricaded the door, police said.

HIJACKERS MISSED A HOT RECEPTION

OTTAWA (CP) — An aborted plan to hijack a Canadian Forces aircraft at Nicosia airport may have been a lucky break for a group of Arab guerrillas Monday.

The guerrillas bombed an apartment house in which the Israeli ambassador to Cyprus lives and then attacked an Israeli aircraft at the airport.

It is reported a contingency plan was for them to hijack a Canadian Forces Boeing 707 then about to arrive at Nicosia.

The plane didn't land and defence department sources here said it would not have under the circumstances.

But had it landed and had the guerrillas attacked it, they would have found on board armed members of the 3rd Battalion, Royal 22nd Regiment — the world-famous Van Doo.

There was no indication how many men were on the aircraft, but a 707 normally carries about 200 passengers.

War Not Formally Over

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Despite the cease-fire agreements earlier this year, the Vietnam War isn't formally over and "there is no bar to resumption by the U.S. president of hostilities" in Vietnam or Laos, a Library of Congress study has concluded.

The study, prepared for the U.S. Senate foreign relations committee appears to completely undermine the position of Capitol Hill critics of the President, who have argued that he lacks any legal basis to hit North Vietnam or Laos again now that U.S. prisoners have been released and U.S. forces withdrawn from South Vietnam.

Without necessarily conceding the full implications of the study's conclusions, foreign relations committee chairman J. W. Fulbright (D — Ark.) declared in releasing it that "it is not entirely clear whether, as a practical or legal matter, these (armistice) agreements will mark the end of the Vietnam War . . ."

For that reason, Fulbright said, congress should "take the initiative at least in declaring that hostilities are now ended . . . (and) prohibit continuation or renewal of our military activities in Indochina, as has been threatened by the president."

Legislation to block U.S. reentry into Vietnam combat already has been drafted by Sens. Clifford P. Case (R — N.J.) and Frank Church (D. — Idaho).

The president, in a television address, hinted at some form of military retaliation against North Vietnam if it didn't stop alleged violations of the Jan. 27 cease-fire agreements. Many of his critics said he lacks any legal basis to order such retaliation without the approval of Congress. But the Library of Congress study, prepared by William C. Gibbons, Allen W. Farlow and Leneice N. Wu, appears to conclude otherwise.

NOT LEGALLY OVER

It states that in the absence of a formal declaration by the president or Congress that the war is over, or of an international peace treaty, the war isn't over in a legal sense.

And whatever presidential powers existed in the first place to carry on the war continues in effect.

The Jan. '27 four-power cease-fire agreement, the study says, "is not a treaty or agreement of peace. Nor does it 'end' the war. According to its preamble, th signatories entered into the agreement 'with a view to ending' the war and restoring the peace in Vietnam . . .

"On March 2, 1973, pursuant to the agreement of Jan. 27, 12 nations signed an 'act of the international conference on Vietnam,' approving and supporting the Vietnam armistice agreement. This, too, is not a treaty or agreement of peace, or does it 'end' the war. It is a statement of intention of the parties, a binding international agreement under which the parties accept certain international obligations."

The report continues: "Although the United States is formally committed to maintaining the cease-fire in Vietnam and to respecting the cease-fire in Laos, there is no bar to resumption by the President of hostilities in either country, or against the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (North Vietnam) . . .

The report concluded that there appeared to be no legal bar to Congress taking action to declare the war over, but if the president rejected such a Congressional declaration, the only Congressional recourse would be to cut off funds for combat.

Prior to the ceasefire, many members of Congress repeatedly attempted to force an end to the Vietnam fighting through a fund cut-off. But while the cut-off passed the Senate twice, it never passed the House. Whether such a tactic would be successful at this stage is unclear.

No Interest In Sub Today

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (UPI) — Somewhere on the ocean floor off New England lie the remains of the nuclear submarine Thresher, the secret of her disaster buried perhaps forever with the 129 men aboard.

Tuesday, the 10th anniversary of what has been described as the worst U.S. peacetime submarine disaster, passed quietly with no formal memorial services.

In previous years, observances were held but a navy spokesman said there was "just not enough interest this year."

Alberta Justice Probe Requested

EDMONTON (CP) — A royal commission inquiry into the administration of justice in Alberta has been requested by the Edmonton social planning council.

In a letter to Premier Peter Lougheed, the council says the Alberta Human Rights and Civil Liberties Association report on Dr. John David Craig "painstakingly documents a wide range of injustices and abuses in our system of justice in this province."

TUNE-UP SESSION for tiny violinists aided by Mrs. Dorothy Evans, right

Rolf Gilstein Takes Big Festival Award

One of the major records in this year's Music Festival belongs to Rolf Gilstein, 18-year-old student of James Hunter and member of the Victoria Symphony and University of Victoria orchestras.

On Tuesday Rolf topped off his previous score of three 90s and a 91 by being awarded the prestigous Congress of Strings prize and winning the string solo senior championship.

The latter will take him to Vancouver in June to participate as another Victoria representative in the Provincial Music Festival with the chance of winning the provincial championship and proceeding to the National Music Festival in Toronto.

The Congress of Strings prize takes him to University of California for six weeks this summer.

Special classes for Suzuki method students have been a highlight of this week's sessions, including solos on doll-size violins by pre-primary tots.

Instead of leaving the stage in ones, twos and threes, these players came on stage that way.

The proceeding began with teacher Frona Colquhoun conducting a half-dozen or so in a Bach number.

These were joined by a few more and so it went until there were 63 violinists all playing with perfect precision — and no conductor — Suzuki's own variations on the tune of Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star.

In between they had played Vivaldi, Dvorak, and more Bach.

Adjudicator Francis Chaplin congratulated teacher and parents, commenting that "these children are getting every proper attention — they are being set solidly on the right track."

He considers the Suzuki method the best possible one for getting very young children started, but "even a great method can be ruined.

"A method is only as good as the people who handle it ticipate were Fairburn, Clofinest."

He remarked that the children had presented an excellent program that made a lot of good sense musically.

Uplands School received the Lillian Smethurst Award and was represented in the honor program by four dances.

Other schools invited to participate were Fairburn, Cloverdale, St. Andrews, Glanford, Craigflower, George Jay, Gordon Head, Sir James Douglas, Willows and South Park.

The Adeline Duncan Dancers, the Cairgorm Dancers and a young Highland group were on the program as well as the Saanich International Folk Dancers, the young Ukrainian Veselka Dancers, an Oak Bay Henderson Park group and the Sea Bird Dancers.

Tonight there is a further strings and orchestra session at Oak Bay Junior, including the junior string and instrumental championships and a school choral session at Victoria Senior Secondary.

CO-OP HOUSING GETS ARCHITECTS

Pioneer Co-operative Housing Association has chosen Sagar and Marshall as architects for Victoria's first co-operative housing development to be built at MaCaskill and Langford in Victoria West.

Association vice-president John Warren, said Tuesday the development will include two, three and four-bedroom homes for 60 to 70 families in the $6,000 to $9,000 income bracket.

The initial estimate for the development is $1,300,000. Interim development capital for the project has been provided by the B.C. Federation of Labor and the United Housing Foundation. The foundation will act as developer in co-operation with the housing and building department of B.C Central Credit Union.

Buyers of the $16,200 to $20,400 attached homes must be members of the association. Down payment which include the provincial government grant will be $1,500. Members who want to live in the development will pay $500 of the down payment when building starts. These funds will be held in trust until completion of the project.

Association spokesman Peter Kagis says the architects will combine the desires of future residents with the limitations of the site.

"As our membership grows the architects could be working with 60 to 70 future owners," Kagis said.

U.S. Digs Up Another Nuclear Horror

OTTAWA (CP) — As if there were not enough horrors connected with nuclear war, the United States has dug up another problem—one bearing the science-fiction-like name of electromagnetic pulse, EMP to the initiated.

Put in its simplest terms, EMP is a lightning-like flash that might result from an American anti-ballistic missile (ABM) knocking out an enemy missile somewhere over North America.

EMP was described by John E. Davis, director of the U.S. defence civil preparedness agency, in a Washington speech that was carried in a publication of the Canadian Emergency Measures Organization.

"Today a new threat within the nuclear era is being recognized," Mr. Davis said. "We in government . . . have heard of this threat for some time—but until fairly recently, I doubt if many of us realized how potent and widespread it could be.

"The threat is called electromagnetic pulse, or EMP."

BLACKOUT LIKELY

Mr. Davis said until recently it was assumed that electricity would continue to flow to consumers in the event of nuclear attack except where blast, heat or fire had destroyed generating facilities.

The discovery of EMP had changed that assumption to one that large areas of the country—presumably that might be changed to the continent—would be blacked out, at least for a time.

This is how EMP works:

When an ABM strikes an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) high over the continent, or when an ICBM is exploded by the enemy in the upper limits of the atmosphere, great quantities of invisible gamma rays are generated.

The rays spread rapidly in all directions, striking molecules of air, knocking electrons out of atoms and propelling these electrons toward earth at the speed of light.

The electrons create a large current source, which radiates an electromagnetic field, similar to that produced by lightning but stronger.

Mr. Davis added as an aside that unlike lightning it does not strike people.

CAPABLE OF KNOCKOUT

The downward-charging EMP can hit a conductor, say an electric wire or a radio or television antenna, and that's where the trouble starts.

A great surge of electric power travels along the conductor and damages or destroys facilities hooked up to that conductor, whether a generating station or a broadcast facility needed to transmit warnings to the public.

Mr. Davis was not greatly concerned about low-altitude nuclear explosions. After all the only area affected by EMP in this case probably would have been blasted out of sight by the explosion.

But it was conceivable that the enemy might purposely explode a bomb at high altitude to knock out electrical facilities.

And then there were the nuclear-tipped ABMs exploding near incoming ICBMs.

"This may cause some adverse EMP reactions," Mr. Davis said.

The only nuclear ABMs the United States has are in the Dakotas not far from the Canadian border.

Mr. Davis said proper shielding can protect electrical equipment from EMP. He said radio and television stations must have this protection to enable them to continue broadcasting emergency information during an attack.

"EMP is a major new threat and needs to be dealt with by civil government and private sector, just as the military is dealing with it in design of both offensive and defensive weapons systems."

Bloodless Bullfights

MONTREAL (CP) — There will be no blood-letting — unless it's accidental — when bull-fighting makes its debut here at the Forum May 18.

The three-day event, under the direction of Alfredo Ovelha of Lisbon, Portugal, will follow Portuguese rules. Unlike Spain and Mexico where the bulls are slain in the ring, under Portuguese rules the animals are not killed by the matador.

Ovelha, with 30 years experience in bull-fighting, will bring 18 bulls from Portugal for the three-day event.

Only a Small Shift To Nationalism Noted

New Canadian unions have had little impact on total union membership in British Columbia in the last two years, the research branch of the labor department said in its monthly report issued this week.

Unions affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress and the AFL-CIO represented 53 per cent of union members and CLC-only unions accounted for 24.6 per cent.

Almost 60 per cent of union members belonged to international unions, 16.2 per cent to national unions (11.6 per cent with the CLC), 22.7 per cent to tional unions, 16.2 per cent to national unions (11.6 per cent with the CIC), 22.1 per cent to regional unions (11 per cent with the CLC) and 1.8 per cent in local unions (0.5 per cent with the CLC).

The research branch said there was a small shift in membership "from the international, more appropriately called 'cotinental' unions, to the national unions from 1971 to 1972."

INTERNATIONALS

The international unions in 1972 had organized 59.3 per cent of total union membership compared with 59.7 per cent in 1971 and 61 per cent in 1970.

"This trend is primarily due to the fact that the national unions dominate the service industry — the fastest-growing industry in the province and the industry where the greatest success in organizing more workers has been attained.

"The much-discussed nationalism seems to have had an insignificant impact from 1971 to 1972 on the total membership of the international unions and the solely Canadian unions."

FOUR-DAY WEEK IN NELSON

Some policemen in Nelson will move to a four-day work week with three consecutive days off.

The research branch of the B.C. labor department, reporting a recent agreement between Nelson city and the Nelson Police Association, said "certain designated members" of the force involved in day-to-day shift routine of general and traffic patrol will be permitted to work four 10-hour days with three consecutive days off.

The contract, covering 11 employees, also provides for a wage increase of $106 a month in two stages bringing the monthly first-class constable rate to $914 on July 1.

MEN DOMINATING UNION MEMBER ROLLS

Men joining trade unions in British Columbia last year outnumbered women 3-to-1.

There were 75,884 women in unions last year, up 3,968 from the previous year, the labor department reports.

The number of men in unions was 256,207, an increase of 11,536.

Women represented 22.9 per cent of the total union work force last year compared with 22.7 per cent in 1971 and 21.2 per cent in 1970.

Labor Unrest Up

Industrial unrest in B.C. was three times greater during the first quarter of this year compared with the same period last year.

Statistics, disclosed this week by the research branch of the labor department, show there were 37 labor-management disputes involving 12,924 workers and a loss of 97,354 work days.

In the same period last year, there were 26 disputes involving 4,570 workers and a loss of 32,153 work days.

A Safe Smoke Unlikely

OTTAWA (CP) — To be commercially successful, tobacco must contain elements that make it hazardous to health, the director general of the agriculture department's research branch said Tuesday.

B. B. Migicovsky told the Commons agriculture committee that the department is experimenting with types of tobacco that contain lower amounts of nicotine and tar than traditional varieties.

But it was not satisfied with the progress of the experiments at Delhi, Ont. and L'Assomption, Que., because they had little chance of succeeding.

"Tobacco, to be acceptable, needs components that make it hazardous," Dr. Migicovsky said. Cigarettes containing less tar and nicotine are not as acceptable to the public as other brands containing more.

In reply to questions, Dr. Migicovsky agreed that there is a conflict between the agriculture and health department on the question of tobacco.

He said the health department will continue to urge people not to smoke, but the agriculture department would continue to help tobacco farmers grow better crops as long as tobacco remained a legal crop.

Voters Approve Arena Complex

PARKSVILLE — School District 69 voters have given a 74 per cent approval to a $700,000 arena-recreation centre complex in Parksville.

About 28 per cent of the 8,100 eligible voters from Parksville, Qualicum, Bowser, Coombs, Horne Lake, Nanoose Bay and surrounding areas turned out for the referendum.

Good Pickings in the Dump

NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C. (CP) — A sanitary engineer says he has spent the last seven years watching new clothing, automobile parts, electronic equipment and even pool tables being buried at a local sanitary fill.

"What I want to know said Ben Hoskin, "is why all this costly merchandise has been thrown away all these years."

Mr. Hoskin, who describes himself as "just a garbageman," said the dumping follows a pattern.

"It always starts just after Christmas and goes on until the beginning of March," he said. "I estimate about 20 truckloads a day are dumped on the Fraser Mills sanitary fill and other fills in the area during those weeks."

He remembers the day a crate half-full of tape recorders was dumped into the fill. Then there were boxes of clothing, followed by transmission systems for automobiles. He watched as three pool tables were also thrown in, encased in large packing boxes.

"About a year ago, a truck arrived at the fill with security officers aboard," he said. "The men lowered a crate into the hole and the bulldozer filled it in and pushed earth over it. Then the men climbed back onto the truck and it was driven away.

"Later it developed that the crate contained a machine part worth about $7,000, but I never found out why it was being dumped or exactly what the machine part was."

DEFENDS PRACTICE

Disposal manager Bob Pennock of Smithrite Disposal Co. which has trucks delivering to the fill, said there are good reasons for the dumping Mr. Hoskin has observed.

"It could be that the items are damaged beyond repair, or that in the case of automobile parts, the items are outdated and unusable.

"It could even be that the companies find it is cheaper to dump the items rather than keep them or return them to the supplier."

Lyle Johnson, general manager of Pacific Disposal which also delivers to the site, echoed Mr. Pennock's views.

"In addition, all the items are destroyed by a method specified by the client," he said. "And we have found that clients are always careful to make sure their destruction orders are carried out."

But the sanitary engineer, when told of the explanations, said he still doesn't understand.

"But the items that have been dumped over the years must have been worth untold thousands of dollars," Mr. Hoskins said. "Who pays the cost of that?"

UNDERWORLD FIGURE FREED

NEW YORK (UPI) — George Whitmore, 31, one of the most controversial figures in New York City's criminal history, was ordered freed from jail Tuesday in a rape case on grounds new evidence had cleared him of the crime.

Whitmore served four years of a five-to-10-year sentence for the crime, which took place April 23, 1964. He previously had three murder charges against him thrown out in what some observers saw as repeated efforts by police and the district attorney's office to frame him.

CAN A $50 PRAYER TURN OFF THE RAIN?

SHELTON, Conn. (AP) — Connecticut has been deluged with rain in recent weeks and a committee of the Shelton board of aldermen thinks divine assistance is needed.

The street committee recently adopted a request to the mayor for a $50 appropriation to St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church for a special prayer to hold up all rain storms for one year. It wants the city's public works department to have a chance to catch up with drainage problems.

Klansmen Take Trial by Judge

DETROIT (UPI)—Five Ku Klux Klansmen charged with bombing 10 empty Pontiac, Mich., school buses in 1971 said they could not get a fair trial from a jury of blacks and northern whites and waived their right to a jury trial.

The action came shortly before jury selection was to begin before U.S. District Judge Lawrence Gubow.

The five are charged in federal grand jury indictments in the bombing of the buses in August 1971, just a few days before they were to be used in a court-ordered racial integration program in Pontiac, about 20 miles north of Detroit.

LEEDS, England — A conference sponsored by Britain's state-owned railways heard Tuesday of a new way to play "chicken." With trains. The conference, on how to stop vandalism and trespassing on railways, heard engineer Douglas Lawton tell his story:

"I had a 140-ton diesel with 400 tons of train behind me doing 60 miles per hour and he was right in front of me," Lawton said of a man standing on the tracks. "I slammed on the brakes, knowing I had no chance at all to stop. I sat there blowing the whistle, knowing this man had five seconds to live. Then, when I was within 20 yards of him, he just stepped off and grinned at me as I went past."

WINLOCK, Wash. — Christmas is coming to Winlock.

The small town (pop. 978) is putting on the special celebration to honor Air Force Maj. Edward Leonard, Jr., who is recuperating at Davis Grant Air Force Medical Centre, Calif., following his recent release after four years in a Communist prison camp. While in prison, he said the thing he missed most was Christmas. Street decorations have been put up in his home town and a 20-foot christmas tree erected.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Dr. Samuel Mudd's family can rest easy at last — at least in Maryland. The state's general assembly approved a resolution Monday night absolving Mudd, a southern Maryland physician, of any involvement in the murder of Abraham Lincoln in April of 1865.

Mudd was convicted as a conspirator when he treated the leg of Lincoln's assassin, John Wilkes Booth, who broke it when he jumped from the presidential box onto the stage of Ford's theatre after shooting Lincoln.

NEW YORK — It was a dog's life — and about 600 people were interested in it. The dog was struck and injured on a Long Island parkway last January in a rainstorm. Barbara Schultz stopped her car and took the injured mongrel to an animal hospital.

Mrs. Schultz's deed was reported in the press, and 600 people mailed her contributions totalling $5,000 to defray expenses which amounted to $200. The remaining $4,800 is being returned.

Police, Radio Defend Guidelines

OTTAWA (CP) — Policemen, broadcasters and members of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (CRTC) spent eight hours Tuesday discussing relations between the police and news media.

The focus of the hearing was a controversial five-page document made public in February amid charges that proposals contained in it would give police control over news broadcasts.

The document, drawn up by representatives of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters (CAB) and the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, contains a set of proposed guides for police-media relations.

Among other things, it declares that police and the news media are partners against lawlessness.

Spokesmen for both associations told the hearing, however, that the proposed guides would not lead to police control of the news. In any case, they said, the guides have not been formally adopted by either organization and would not be binding on radio or television stations if they were.

But spokesmen for unions and journalist associations said the guides could well lead to unjustified restrictions on the flow of news.

GOOD AND BAD

One commission member, Jacques Hebert, told police spokesmen their comments indicate they want a system under which the news media would know only "what you want them to know."

Hebert also told W. H. Kelly, retired RCMP deputy commissioner, that Kelly seems to divide journalists into good and bad — the good ones those who accept police directives and never criticize the police, the bad ones — independent journalists who dig out their own facts and do not hold back criticism.

Kelly said he respects the right of the news media to report and criticize. He said his comlaint is that the news media do not do their utmost to ensure accuracy in their reports.

CRTC chairman Pierre Juneau said the commission would like specific examples of police-media problems "instead of getting involved in a very general discussion where everybody seems to be right."

When witnesses just made very general statements about the need for freedom of the press or the need for responsible reporting, it was hard to disagree with either philosophy, he said.

Among the specific issues discussed at the hearing were the views of police spokesmen that:

—Inexperienced reporters are too often broken in by putting them on the police beat, leading to inaccurate reporting.

—The news media should seek to confirm news with designated police spokesmen rather than relying on unauthorized secret sources within a police force.

—Investigative reporters should be conscious of their duties as citizens and give the police information they discover about crimes.

Chief Leo Seguin of Ottawa said editorializing on policies adopted by the police association, such as their call for reinstatement of capital punishment, has generally been negative and erroneous.

"If this negative approach could be removed, we would have no complaint whatever and I think this is what we are trying to achieve in establishing these guidelines."

MINERAL TAX RAPPED

Opposition parties in the legislation criticized the government Tuesday night for bringing in legislation which will create further tax revenue for the province from mineral land taxes.

The opposition spokesman said there has been no need demonstrated by the government for the extra money which will be generated by the land tax which Mines Minister Leo Nimsick has said will bring in $12 million to $15 million in the first year and $20 million to $25 million in subsequent years.

The legislature was debating the principle of the Mineral Land Tax Act. The bill was finally approved in principle in a divided vote, with the government outvoting the opposition 32-15.

Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) said the bill is "just another example of the overtaxing policy of the NDP government."

He said Premier Barrett has indicated the government's desire to do business with industry.

"That's baloney. They want to do business against industry."

Don Phillips (SC—South Peace) said the government should give some consideration to the smaller mining companies in the province before "getting out the big stick to beat around the big companies."

Liberal leader David Anderson said the government has given no justification for the tax revenue it proposes to collect through the legislation and that there should at least be companion legislation to reduce taxes elsewhere in the mining industry.

He said the principle of the bill is to encourage companies to take the minerals out of the ground since they are penalized through taxes for leaving them in the ground.

Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) said the intent of the legislation is to "get at the CPR and the CNR operations in B.C." through taxation of rights-of-way held by the two railways.

In defending the legislation, Nimsick said it only really applies to privately-owned mineral rights in the province. Most of these are held by large companies which can afford to pay the tax the government is asking, he said.

Student Beats Spread

Police beats in five British Columbia areas will have law-student constables this summer, says the training scheme's organizer, Victoria Police Chief J. F. Gregory.

Federal financing of the program, now in its fourth year, will provide four students in Victoria, three in Saanich, five in Vancouver, three in New Westminster, and two in West Vancouver.

The federal government has allotted $240,000 for the program, $35,000 of which will subsidize the B.C. students. Each summer constable earns $700 a month.

About 70 students across Canada are expected to participate this year, said Gregory.

ITT CLAIM REFUSED

WASHINGTON (WP) — A U.S. government corporation has denied the International Telephone and Telegraph Company's $92.5 million claim to indemnify it for expropriation of its Chilean telephone subsidiary in 1971.

Bradford Mills, president of the Overseas Private Investment Corp., said its claim was turned down because of "non-compliance with contractual obligations."

ITT, which reported $8.5 billion in sales and revenues last year through a Washington spokesman that it would seek arbitration of the decision.

Meanwhile, Chilean Foreign Minister Clodimoro Almeyda hinted at a news conference that ITT's remaining holdings in his country, two Sheraton hotels and a telephone equipment manufacturing company, might also become targets of government action.

Oil Dumping Crackdown Urged

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The provincial government should crack down on corporations that regulary dump oil into rivers and inlets, Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) said Tuesday.

He told the legislature committee on oil spills that regulations had to be made that went far beyond oil spills from supertankers.

"The tanker issue is just the tip of the iceberg. It is a far more complex question than that."

He was commenting on statistics supplied to the committee by Gary Gallon of Vancouver, chairman of the SPEC oil spill committee.

Gallon had said that of all oil dumped into the water during the year only two per cent came from tanker spills. Meanwhile four per cent was deliberately dumped into the water by offshore vessels cleaning their holds.

By contrast almost 70 per cent of all oil dumped into the water each year in British Columbia comes from industries located at the water's edge.

Gallon told the committee the main problem is in Burrard Inlet where oil and steel companies regularly dump large amounts of waste oil without being fined.

He suggested constant monitoring devices should be installed in discharge pipes for major industries on Burrard Inlet to determine which companies were the main offenders.

Committee chairman James Gorst (NDP—Esquimalt) said the committee would look at both problems, oil pollution caused by vessels and pollution from industry dumping oil wastes into the water.

Gallon said while SPEC is alarmed about the potential damage done by tanker spills, a crackdown on deliberate dumping of oil waste should get a high priority.

But deliberate dumping of oil is polluting main water areas of the province.

He said marine life in Burrard Inlet is being killed off by major industries there.

And deliberate dumping of bilge from vessels bound for Vancouver was polluting waters of Juan de Fuca Strait.

"The tragedy is that they dump the bilge in the same spot every time. The same spot, the same spot. It leads to the cumulative destruction of marine life in that area."

The committee decided to pursue the question of deliberate oil dumping at later meetings.

Lea said the Liberals were always quick to defend corporations but were never around when the time came to criticize corporations for polluting the environment.

(The only Liberal member of the committee is provincial leader David Anderson who had appeared briefly at the start of the meeting to say he would be unable to attend as he was scheduled to be the next speaker in the legislature, which was in session at the same time.)

In the formal SPEC brief presented to the committee, Gallon said all three major oil spills in B.C. during the last 13 months could have been prevented.

In March, 1972, the freighter Vanlene went aground on rocks near Bamfield spilling 37,500 gallons of bunker and diesel oil. SPEC said the ship was being piloted with faulty navigation instruments.

In June, 1972, the tanker Work Bond spilled up to 2,000 gallons of crude oil at Cherry Point. SPEC said the pump valve which broke was faulty.

In January of this year the freighter Irish Stardust went aground near Alert Bay spilling 88,000 gallons of bunker oil. Although the cause of the mishap has still to be determined, SPEC said it is convinced the verdict will be either pilot error or failure of navigation equipment.

Gallon said there is no way known to clean up oil spills effectively.

In the long run the only plan that makes sense is to prevent oil spills.

DIAL-A-BUS TO BE TRIED

A dial-a-bus pilot project will be carried out in a B.C. community "within a couple of months," Municipal Affairs Minister Jim Lorimer told the legislature Tuesday.

Lorimer was responding to a question from Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) during the day's question period.

The minister said all transportation matters are under study at the moment. But he added: "I would expect that there will be a dial-a-bus experiment somewhere within a couple of months."

Dial-a-bus is a system whereby a passenger phones a central dispatch office and gives the address where he wants to be picked up. A bus in the general area makes a stop at that point and continues on its route.

Cleft Care Set

Health Minister Dennis Cocke told the legislature Tuesday the provincial government will provide free orthodontic and dental care to children afflicted with cleft palates and cleft lips.

Cocke was asked during question period by Phyllis Young (NDP—Vancouver Little Mountain) what his plans are regarding free dental care for children under 12. Cocke has gone on record as saying it is the government's intention to provide free preventive care for all citizens at some point in the future.

He said he is still awaiting reports on the matter from the province's scientists. But he did say that free dental and orthodontic work will be provided for children with cleft palate.

"There is no need to have these people walking around with pieces of paper in their mouths to keep them semi-articulate," he said.

A Gentle Watering Needed by Most Plants

Nothing more than a few summery clouds in a blue spring sky hold any promise of humidity, so we must set a hose at gently watering some of our garden plants.

First to feel drought even this early are shallow-rooting shrubs near foundations or walls; next, the ones planted last fall or since; and thirdly, shallow rooting herbaceous perennials on a sloping bank or perhaps in rock pockets.

Another group we shall find in today's gardens and on apartment balconies comprises those in tubs, planters or other containers, even narrow, free-standing brick or stone walls.

Long periods of low rainfall are common here in the Victoria area, though 20 miles away in any direction adequate amounts may be received. This is just another reason why our Island soil needs fortifying with quantities of fibrous material if we want to grow the wide range of plants suited to our general climate.

Humus, or fibre among the soil particles holds moisture in reserve, thus reducing the need for frequent artificial watering and also taking care of the plants' moisture requirements between rainy periods in early spring and again in late fall.

To get on with some hose watering — first decide if shrubs near the house are in dry soil. Even though a shower may dampen the general area before you read this, you are likely to find dryness an inch below the surface.

If your shrubs are small coniferous evergreens or broad-leaved ones like rhodos, pierises and almost any other with evergreen leaves, you need to give a gentle soaking enough to penetrate four to six inches below the surface.

This job is more thoroughly done on two successive days to save water by getting it down slowly to where the roots are.

On the third day, take a small shovel and dig a small test hole in the watered area, but midway between two shrubs to avoid damaging roots. Bring out some soil from six inches down to see if it is damp.

Plants of any kind in containers of wood, stone, or plastic fibres will be wanting a thorough watering, for the outer surfaces conduct heat inwards to dry out the soil around the roots.

Here again, you do better by giving a partial watering in the morning and repeat in early afternoon. Water running out the bottom is not always a sign that the soil is damp all through.

It may be so dry that it has shrunk from the container, or the soil may have lost all the humus, thus has nothing to hold moisture.

Top dressing planters and tubs with humusy compost often takes the place of replanting for two or three years. Always remembering to leave two inches space at the rim to prevent loss of soil when watering.

Newly planted trees, or shrubs, those which have been moved in the garden may not get through the spring if they don't get moisture at their roots now.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

At the 1972 Summer National Championships, a team captained by Ron Smith of St. Louis reached the semi-finals of the Spingold Knockout Team-of-Four Championships. In the 38-year history of this event, this was the first time that a black player had advanced that far. Actually, I should say that since 1956 no black player had advanced that far, for prior to 1956, black players were not permitted to participate in American Contract Bridge League tournaments.

An example of Smith in action can be observed in today's deal, which came up in the semi-final round of the Spingold event. Smith was sitting South. West was James Jacoby.

North-South vulnerable. South deals.

Looking at West's hand, one would find it difficult to fault West for his double of the four-spade bid, although it turned out to be costly.

West's opening heart lead was captured by dummy's ace, after which the queen of hearts was cashed. South now proceeded to play the hand on the assumption that West, for his double, had the five outstanding trumps.

To trick three, he led the king of diamonds, West's ace winning. West then cashed the ace of clubs, and next led his remaining club, South ruffing the trick.

South now cashed the diamond queen, after which he played the king and jack of hearts. When East failed to ruff the fourth heart lead — discarding a club instead — declarer's original feeling was confirmed: West had started with the five missing trumps.

At this point, South's five remaining cards were the A-K-10-6-4 of trumps. West's last five cards were the Q-9-8-7-5 of trumps; dummy had (amongst other cards) the J-2 of trumps. At trick nine, South led the four of trumps towards dummy's jack — and all West could make from here in was his spade queen. If he didn't take the queen, dummy's jack would win. A low trump would then be returned, South inserting his six-spot. Upon winning with the seven, West would now be end-played, with South's A-K-10 capturing the last three tricks.

Lucy nodded. "I don't call that mean!"

John smiled. "There are 30 of us in all," he said. "It was $1 each for men, but only half of us gave. The girls were nearly as bad. Only two-thirds of them donated, and that was at 75 cents each."

How much was collected?

Thanks for an idea to Dermot Burke, Shankill, Eire.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Is It Really Constipation?

Years ago when I used to lecture on constipation, I used to tell the students that I had found that the assumption, commonly stated in all he old books, that a man empties his large bowel completely every morning after breakfast, is wrong. Many years ago, an assistant and I showed what really happens to food in the bowel by giving to each of a number of college students a capsule containing 50 tiny glass beads, and then counting the number of these beads which appeared each day in their fecal material.

The average student took three days to pass most of the beads, but a few others, who seemed normal enough, took 10 days. If the person took a laxative or got a diarrhea, he promptly emptied out almost all of the beads. Then he was likely to go two or three days without a bowel movement. Why? Simply because his colon had to fill up again before it could overflow.

In describing this to my students and patients, I used the simile of a railroad siding with three box-cars on it. Each day a new car came along and, hitting the three, bumped one off the further end. As a result, there were always three cars on the siding. If some day a car coming down hit so hard that all three cars were bumped off, it took three days for the siding to fill again, and during that time, no cars came away.

This is why I carefully question a person complaining of constipation to make sure that he or she really is constipated. For example, I have a woman patient who is always complaining of being constipated, and so she takes an enema every day. But I doubt that she is truly constipated, because she never gives her bowel a chance to fill up for three days and then start working as it should.

U.K. Tougher On Rhodesia

LONDON (AP) — Britain outlined a major shift in its Rhodesia policy Wednesday by insisting that basic black-white agreement must precede any new negotiations for a settlement.

Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home said in the House of Commons:

"There must be a basic agreement between responsible Africans and the Rhodesian administration before any proposals can be seriously considered."

The British move in effect gives the African majority the power to veto any approach by the Smith regime for a constitutional agreement legalizing Rhodesian statehood.

In the past Britain has confined its attempts for a settlement of the Rhodesian rebellion to talk with the white settler regime of Premier Ian Smith. There never was any requirement for Smith's cabinet to come to terms with black leaders in advance of a deal with Britain.

Only last week Smith announced he would be making a new approach to Britain.

The foreign office earlier Wednesday acknowledged Smith has replied to Douglas-Home's plea for the immediate release of Peter Niesewand, 28, a South African-born reporter sentenced last week to two years hard labor after a secret trial on undisclosed security charges. He has appealed the conviction and sentence, half of which was suspended.

Douglas-Home gave no details of Smith's response.

BCGEU PLANS VOTE ON COUNCIL LINK

A referendum will be conducted among members of the Victoria branch of the B.C. Government Employees Union on affiliation with the Victoria Labor Council.

Peter Marshall, Victoria staff representative for BCGEU, said today a branch membership meeting has agreed to establish a two-part committee to "draw up the pros and cons" of affiliation.

No date has been set for the referendum among the 1,900 branch members but Marshall did not expect it would be held in less than a month.

Blanshard Talks Encourage Curtis

Mayor Hugh Curtis today expressed pleasure with the outcome of discussion between Saanich and Highways Minister Robert Strachan over Blanshard Street extension.

"It was a good meeting in both directions and will obviously lead to further discussions," Curtis reported after the morning appointment in Strachan's office.

"We agreed we would not discuss it publicly because it involves land," he said.

But he did indicate the exchange, which lasted under an hour, covered "the whole question very fully" and went into the whole route of the connecting link in Saanich.

Blanshard Street is a six-lane divided thoroughfare from Pandora to Topaz Park, and four lanes, not divided, to Tolmie, all in the city of Victoria.

The previous government dropped the project of making Blanshard a six-lane secondary highway connector from the urban core to Patricia Bay and Trans-Canada highways near the Town and Country shopping centre in Saanich.

For 10 years it has fed into a bottleneck north of Tolmie, the Victoria-Saanich boundary, and new commercial development in the area has reduced the chances of economical property acquisition for continuing the secondary link.

Rationing Unlikely

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — The acting director of President Nixon's office of emergency preparedness today discounted speculation that gasoline rationing will be necessary in the United States this summer.

CHANEL NO. 5 FROM CAT SWEAT

NEW YORK (UPI) — One of the 100 secret ingredients of Chanel No. 5 perfume is "the sweat of the whipped Abyssinian civet cat," according to one of its makers.

Colin Platt, a veterinarian for the society for animal rights, said Tuesday that the whipping part of the claim is not true. Nonetheless, the way the sweat is collected cuts the cat's life in half, he said.

Platt, who visited one of the largest civet cat farms in Southern Ethiopia on behalf of the international society, said the cats are confined in tiny cages. The civet cat is wild and has a long body and short legs. Its "civet" is a thick, yellowish musk-smelling substance and is removed from a pouch near its sex organ.

The announcement by Jacques Leal, chairman of Chanel Ltd., last year that one of the perfume's secret ingredients was the whipped cat's musk set off a boycott of the perfume.

Leal reassured animal lovers in form letters that "the essential ingredient is obtained by the most modern and painless procedure."

Crucifixion To Be Sung By Choir

The Crucifixion by John Stainer will be presented by St. John's Church Choir on Good Friday, April 20, at 8 p.m.

Directing the choir will be John Gallikenne, with soloists Charles Dorrington, tenor, and Garth Gislason, baritone. Grahame Baker will be at the organ.

The Crucifixion was composed by Stainer in 1887 and follows the traditional Passion in construction with biblical text interrupted by reflective thought.

The choir also will present J. S. Bach's Ich Habe Genug, a cantata composed in 1731 for the Feast of the Purification of Mary.

Lifetime Pass For Minister

Victoria Jaycees will Friday present Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall with a lifetime pass to the Victoria Exhibition.

The presentation will be part of a parade to advertise the May 14 to 19 fair. Jaycees will meet at Centennial Square at 11:30 a.m. Friday to begin their march to the Legislative Buildings.

Further Studies On Nanaimo Harbor

OTTAWA (CP) — Further feasibility studies will be carried out before approval is given to the proposed development of Nanaimo harbor, the transport department announced Tuesday.

A review of the proposal by the Canadian Ports and Harbors Planning Committee has recommended that engineering, ecological, urban and socio-economic impact studies be carried out on possible development sites before the project is approved.

The committee, which held an open hearing in Nanaimo Jan. 25, said the question of forest product assembly and export shipping terminals in B.C. should be researched in depth.

The department said the studies would be complete hopefully by the end of this year.

CONG WON'T GET OBSERVER ROLE

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — Secretary General Kurt Waldheim does not intend to give the Viet Cong observer status at the United Nations, diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

But they said the sensitive question of whether the Provisional Revolutionary Government, or Viet Cong, would open a "liaison office" at the United Nations is still under discussion.

A UN spokesman said Waldheim's personal representative in Paris discussed the proposal Monday with Viet Cong representatives.

The Waldheim representative, the spokesman said, discussed "different aspects of the problem" with the Viet Cong envoys. But he said that these talks dealt with the possibility of a "liaison office," not with the question of granting observer status to the Viet Cong.

Diplomatic sources said they expected Waldheim to reach a decision after his return to New York next week.

Paper 'Guilty' For Refusing Ad

OTTAWA (CP) — The Toronto Star has been found guilty of discrimination against a homosexual periodical, the Ontario Press Council says in a decision released today.

The Star is one of eight Ontario newspapers which are members of the council, established last year to adjudicate complaints from the public against the newspapers.

The complaint, involving the newspaper's refusal to publish a classified advertisement for the newspaper Body Politic, was brought by Gerald Hannon, co-ordinator of the periodical.

Hannon told the council that when he accused The Star of discrimination, the newspaper replied that it was its policy not to accept advertising which would "identify or tend to identify a person as a homosexual or to carry advertisements relating to sexual activity."

The council decision says a publisher has the right to determine the acceptability for publication of any advertisement, but in this case there was discrimination in the refusal to publish a simple advertisement for a periodical.

SUPPORTS CITIZEN

In another case, the council rejected an accusation against the Ottawa Citizen that claimed the newspaper showed unfair bias in favor of Pakistan in news stories and comment about that country, India and Bangladesh.

Call Off Snipers, Cong Officer Told

SAIGON (CP) — Canadian forces Capt. Ray Parsons physically lifted a Viet Cong officer and forced him to an open roadway to ensure that Viet Cong snipers halted their fire on a grounded truce observer helicopter, Master Cpl. Robert Laplante said today.

Laplante, a survivor of the wrecked and grounded helicopters last Saturday, also said the United States civilian pilots feared for their lives in Viet Cong territory and sought Canadian protection during the two-day ordeal in the mountainous bush land.

"Everybody signed statements in the Viet Cong hamlet except me," the native of Melocheville, Que., told reporters in his first public statement since he emerged from communist held territory early Monday. He said he was not asked to sign anything.

Laplante, a communications expert, and Parsons, of Red Deer, Alta., were the two Canadians in the second of two helicopters flying to a projected team site in Lao Bao, on the Laotian border.

The first helicopter, occupied by Capt. Charles Laviolette of Quebec City and eight other persons including two Viet Cong officers, crashed and burned after it was shot down by a heat-seeking rocket. The second aircraft was forced down after it was hit by what Laplante described as large-calibre machine-gun fire.

"When we landed on a road about 500 feet from a small hamlet, the PRG (Viet Cong) interpreter on our helicopter couldn't get his safety belt undone and Capt. Parsons took his belt off," Laplante said.

"Then he lifted the PRG man on the dirt road and yelled at him to do some talking. We were taking small arms fire coming from the hills. We took cover in a ditch at the side of the road.

"The PRG man was scared. The firing stopped soon after the PRG yelled something. Our American pilot and co-pilot were shook up. They didn't want to be left alone. I told them that we came into Viet Cong territory together and we would go out together."

From where he sat in the second helicopter, Laplante said, he had no clear line of vision in front of the chopper, but he had his feet outside the open doorway and could see below. The helicopters flew directly over the Khe Sanh airport and he could see the landing strip and some buildings that appeared to be hangars.

About 10 minutes later he heard firing and the helicopter began to swerve sharply in evasive action. When it landed, it had bullet holes including a two-inch hole in the tail section.

"The first helicopter, which crashed, was about a mile away. When we landed we were taken to a bamboo hut in the hamlet which seemed to be an army camp. I asked to use the radio which I was taking to test communications at Lao Bao, but the local people would not give me permission."

Laplante, a husky soldier with tattoos on his arms, said that after landing, the PRG man in their helicopter went to the crash scene of the first chopper. He came back to say there were no survivors.

"We were well treated. When I asked to get my cigarettes from my helicopter I found that the Viet Cong had got to the cigarettes first. We used our C-rations the first day. The Viet Cong gave us hot water and tea. We slept in bamboo beds. They gave us mosquito nets.

Most of the party went off to the crash site on the second day. Laplante stayed behind mainly to reassure the U.S. pilots and the Filipino crew member.

"The U.S. pilots feared a separation and said they were glad that we Canadians were around. When the others returned, we were told that the nine men in the first chopper didn't have a chance. The rear end had burned up. The PRG said they found only seven bodies."

"They said they had trucks to take us back but they still needed fuel. We didn't leave until 8:45 p.m. Sunday. We left in three Chinese-made jeeps followed by a truck containing the bodies wrapped in green bags. We did not examine the bodies."

It took nine hours and 45 minutes to make the journey back, a distance of about 75 miles. There was argument over their location. The U.S. pilots said they were on Highway 9, the authorized route. The PRG said they were on Highway 14.

Waiting for them at Gio Linh on the northern coast was Maj.-Gen. Duncan McAlpine, Canadian military commander, and the military chiefs of the Polish, Indonesian and Hungarian contingents.

"Gen. McAlpine said he was really glad to see us," Laplante said

"It was quite an experience. It was the first time in 12 years in the army that I was shot at. But I am ready to give it another try."

Laplante said he did not know what was in the statement signed by the survivors in the hamlet. He said there was some argument and that the survivors changed the wording before they signed.

Japan Steals Trading Show In Europe

By FRED COLEMAN

LONDON (AP) — President Nixon said 1973 would be the "year of Europe," but someone must have forgotten to tell the Japanese.

In Europe, so far, the year seems to belong to Japan, at least in those fields in which money talks.

The Japanese are outselling everyone, including the Americans, in a wide variety of goods from midget cameras to giant ships. And now the Japanese are beginning to outbuy all the others too. They set the prices and walk off with the top buys on such rich men's fancies as impressionist paintings and thoroughbred race horses.

At the moment, the last of the red hot spenders seems more likely to be living in Tokyo than in Texas. Part of the reason is the weakness of the United States dollar over the last two years and the strength of the Japanese yen.

Less than two years ago, it took more than 360 yen to buy the same dollar. The difference has been two devaluations of the U.S. currency and a sharp revaluation of Japan's money.

As a result, foreign goods now cost Americans about 16 per cent more. Foreign goods cost the Japanese about 35 per cent less.

IMPACT IS FELT

Christie's, the London art auction house, plans to open an office in Tokyo next year to make it easier for Japanese buyers to bid from home. Sotheby's, its rival, has a Japanese television crew in to film a documentary on how the art market works here, apparently to satisfy demand in Tokyo.

Investor's Chronicle, a British magazine, tells its readers they might make more money in Tokyo than in London or New York.

"The Japanese stock market will probably continue being the most rewarding in the world," it says.

At Christie's spring sale of impressionist and modern paintings, Japanese bought 21 of the 63 works auctioned and paid 61 per cent of the $3 million collected. The top price—$283,000— was paid by a Japanese dealer for Renoir's portrait of Madame Mithouard, doubling the expected price for this fairly late example of the artist's work.

FAVOR IMPRESSIONISTS

Art experts here offer various explanations for Japanese interest in the impressionists, among them the appeal of "large, lovely, luscious Renoir ladies," the status symbol of owning a fine Western painting; or investment.

Christie's say there is evidence the Japanese are beginning to buy European arms and armor and antique furniture as well. So far, jewelry and old master paintings have been left to American and European buyers.

At the firm's last major sale in Newmarket, England, Japanese buyers paid nearly $4 million of the $15 million collected.

Liquor Workers Reject Offer

EDMONTON (CP) — The Civil Service Association of Alberta said Tuesday that its 825 members employed by the Alberta Liquor Control Board have rejected a government contract offer.

Bill Broad, president of the association, said the offer carried an average wage increase of 8.2 per cent the first year and six per cent the second year.

Broad said the employees average $525 a month. They want wage parity with clerks in major food stores who average about $690 a month, he said.

'Snail Express' Hits U.S.

Postal service in the United States has dropped to such a slow pace that the Wall Street Journal has aptly dubbed it The Snail Express. Irate householders and businessmen awaiting that missing letter use more flavorsome expressions.

Companies throughout the country, especially those which sell by mail, report declining profits and loss of business because of slow mail deliveries. This is especially so during the holiday seasons, such as Christmas, when the mails are the heaviest—and the slowest—and non-delivery of an item means a lost account.

One mail-order house reported it had to spend $50,000 to ship gift items by air to meet the Christmas deadline.

Letter deliveries are routinely slow, though the post office claims that 90 per cent of firstclass local letters mailed before 5 p.m. are delivered next day. Some deliveries take weeks.

TWO MONTHS LATE

Delays of up to a week or more in deliveries of mail from Canada are not uncommon. Canadian newspapers, which get third-class handling, have been known to arrive in New York two months late.

The post office concedes that its headquarters in Washington is receiving more than 600 complaints a week, double the normal figure. The senate post office committee is looking into the problem and several congressmen are seeking repeal of legislation which gave the post office department semi-independent status in 1971.

Since 1971, the department has reduced the amount of government subsidy it needs, increased productivity, cut its payroll and turned increasingly toward automation. It also has reduced the number of daily deliveries and cut staff. Deliveries to business firms have been cut to two a day from three.

The department, which patterns much of its service after the Canadian post office, had been considering following Canada in eliminating Saturday residential deliveries. However, this study has been shelved because of the uproar over present service.

TURN TO PRIVATE FIRMS

An increasing number of American business houses are turning to the more than 150 private postal companies which have developed in the U.S. in recent years and which claim to be able to deliver direct-mail advertising and other items faster and cheaper than the mail service. Private parcel delivery services have overtaken the post office in the volume of parcels handled.

The Wall Street Journal reported that when the town of East Windsor, N.J., celebrated its 175th anniversary recently, President Nixon sent a special message to be read at the festivities.

The White House made one mistake; it mailed the message.

The President's congratulations arrived six days after the celebration. The only official message to arrive on time came from New Jersey Gov. William Cahill. He had the foresight to send his message by helicopter.

Canadian Prisons 'Failing'

SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — Solicitor-general Warren Allmand says the Canadian penal system has failed and that only rehabilitation can prevent the country's crime rate from soaring.

"We have to keep reminding people that criminals go to prison for determinated periods . . . they are all going to get out," Mr. Allmand told a criminology class at St. Francis Xavier University Sydney campus Monday.

At present four out of five people released from prison found their way back because the prison experience had not changed their attitude toward society.

Allmand strongly defended the federal government's parole and special-absence programs, claiming the actual success of the programs was often overlooked because of publicity generated by "spectacular" failures.

In fact, only a minute percentage of failures had occurred in the temporary-absence program and weaknesses in the parole system were being tightened up by Ottawa.

The solicitor-general said the temporary-absence program has proven itself a valuable tool in re-introducing ex-prisoners to society.

U.K. REJECTS HANGMAN

LONDON (UPI) — The House of Commons today rejected decisively a bid to bring back hanging in Britian three years after it was abolished.

It did so by a vote of 320-178, defeating a private bill submitted by Edward Taylor, a Conservative party backbencher.

Both the government and the opposition Labor Party allowed their supporters to vote freely according to their consciences without party discipline.

But Prime Minister Edward Heath, a strong opponent of hanging, led opponents of hanging into the lobby to vote against it.

Taylor's bill called for restoration of the death penalty for murderers of policemen or prison warders while in the exercise of their duty or for murders involving explosives or firearms.

"There can be no reasonable doubt that violence and killings have increased," Taylor said. "But the real issue is not whether there has been an increase in violence but whether any connection can be established between this and the decision to abolish capital punishment."

Taylor said the purpose of the bill was "to strike terror into the hearts of criminals in possession of guns and of terrorists who contemplated murder by explosives."

But Roy Jenkins, a former Labor Party home secretary, said, "The bill would be ineffective, impracticable and wrong."

Supplies Reach Blockaded City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — A 387-vehicle convoy broke through the Communist blockade today, bringing the first supplies in 20 days to this beleaguered city.

In Vietnam, Communists launched three sharp attacks in the Mekong Delta southwest of Saigon today, and U.S. officials said that in the north the North Vietnamese had virtually annexed the region south of the demilitarized zone with a string of air defence weapons.

The supply convoy arrived in Phnom Penh shortly after the United States started an airlift of fuel into the Cambodia capital, and started speculation that their airlift will be cancelled.

The convoy carried desperately needed supplies of food, salt, lumber, cement and heavy machinery and arrived without serious incident under heavy U.S. air cover.

The Berlin-style airlift of petroleum products was announced in the mdst of the biggest Communist offensive ever launched in Cambodia. The offensive now in its third month, virtually severed all major supply lines feeding the capital, causing serious shortages of many basic necessities throughout the capital.

The most serious shortages are of petroleum products and all the city's gas stations have completely depleted their stocks despite strict government rationing. The petroleum shortage has caused power supply problems and most of the capital lives in a 24-hour power blackout.

Since the capital's water supply depends upon electric pumps, many areas have been without water for nearly one week causing severe problems now that the temperature averages 95 degrees.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Defence Secretary Elliot Richardson said that the flow of Soviet and Chinese arms through North Vietnam will determine in large part how long fighting continues in Cambodia.

"I think that the key to the situation may very well lie there," Richardson said. The Russians and Chinese "could unquestionably exercise influence" over the amount of weapons that reach Cambodia through North Vietnam.

In Vietnam, a U.S. state department official said Hanoi probably will try to achieve its objectives in Indochina by political rather than military means, despite mounting ceasefire violations.

The situation at the surrounded government border ranger camp at Ton Le Chan, 50 miles north of Saigon, where Communist shellings have been an almost daily occurrence since the end of February, was reported unchanged today.

Firm Admits Subdivision Problems

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE
Times Staff

NORTH COWICHAN — Kingsview Properties Ltd. admitted Tuesday it should have consulted the public six months ago on its controversial housing subdivision here.

The firm also said the proposed subdivision could displace wildlife, pollute nearby well water, cause erosion and create traffic problems.

These conclusions were offered at a special briefing two days in advance of a public hearing which may decide the fate of the proposed development. Most of the company's owners were on hand.

The briefing, combined with a reception and buffet luncheon at the Quamichan Inn, was laid on for the press. A helicopter was also brought in from Victoria to give reporters a view of the 505-acre subdivision site on the north side of Tzouhalem Mountain.

One month ago, North Cowichan citizens crowded a public hearing and turned it into a noisy and almost unanimous protest against the development plans.

A land-use contract which serves as a zoning law is at issue in the Kingsview controversy. The public hearing heard complaints that the contract was merely a licence to develop without interference for 10 years.

One of the contract's parts, a drawing of the 1,300-lot subdivision, was ridiculed as being a fraud because no land registry would accept it as a plan.

Dick Wright, an employee of B. White and Associates, said the plan could not be registered until the surveying pins are in place throughout the subdivision.

Coming up with a registerable plan before the survey would be "putting the cart before the horse," he said.

The bleakest report read at the briefing came from ecologist Murray Galbraith of Victoria. Assuming that new roads and roofs covering 15 per cent of the site will form surfaces impervious to rainwater, the "rate of erosion in streams may be increased."

This drainage water only makes up 1.7 per cent of the whole drainage to Lake Quamichan, but it will "contain pollutants in more variety and concentration than are presently found within the basin. At least two wells which are located at stream side and used for drinking and stock watering could be contaminated."

Galbraith said it is probable that "the only solution would be switching to the municipal supply" of water.

Galbraith noted that facilities will be designed to control pollution of this kind.

"The present best estimate is that up to a dozen deer utilize the developmnt area, with ring-necked pheasant, California quail and other

Price Board Slated

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers Affairs Minister Herb Gray told the Commons there is a need for a food prices review board, but did not specify how it would operate.

Particulars would be contained in legislation or a detailed statement, likely to be announced before the end of the month, he said.

The 25-member all-party committee released a report last week calling for a board to review food prices. It did not say the board should be empowered to act independently, but suggested it make recommendations to Gray.

The 10 Conservatives on the committee have refused to be associated with the report and Tuesday charged it was yet another coalition effort of the Liberals and the NDP.

However, Grace MacInnis said her party will not be satisfied with a "toothless wonder" such as the now defunct prices and incomes commission.

She said the board must commend steps to ensure food prices do not increase, or even ask the government to roll back prices.

In Montreal Steinberg's Foods Ltd., Quebec's largest food chain, dropped prices on popular steaks, roasts and ground beef an average of six cents a pound.

The move followed similar action by Marche Union Inc., which operates 23 stores.

Other food chains said they would study the situation before making reductions.

OIL SPILL AT COLWOOD

Between 4,000 to 5,000 gallons of fuel oil were spilled into the water at the armed forces' Colwood refuelling jetty at 8:15 a.m .today.

By noon today, all but about 2,000 gallons had been "returned to the system through quick action on the part of the armed forces' personnel," he said.

The remainder was contained by booms and a slick-licker was being called into clean up the spill.

Shifting Wind Switches Flood

Times News Services

Shifting winds Tuesday night brought more devastation to southwestern Ontario and Essex County.

This time flooding struck the Lake St. Clair area and the county's north shore, already badly damaged in St. Patrick's Day flooding in March.

In the U.S. an early spring storm that paralysed parts of the midwest churned across the northeast today bringing heavy snow and freezing temperatures.

Earlier this week, the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores of Essex County were devastated by howling easterly winds up to 50 miles an hour that hurled water seven feet high against homes, cottages, docks and farmlands.

Tuesday night it was the turn of lakefront property owners who live on the county's Lake St. Clair shore.

Winds from the northwest, gusting up to 25 miles an hour, whipped up five-foot waves and sent them over the shoreline and man-made barricades.

Parts of some communities on the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores were still under water late Tuesday in the aftermath of a wild storm Monday.

In the U.S., freeze or frost warnings were extended from Missouri and Illinois into the Ohio Valley and to the states along the Gulf of Mexico. Only Florida was expected to be spared. Birmingham, Ala., reported a record April 10 low of 31 degrees.

Heavy-snow warnings were posted for parts of Maine, where five inches already have hit Rumford. Greenville and Houlton had four inches.

Dockers Protest

PORTLAND, Ore. (CP) — Dockworkers in Seattle and Tacoma began a 24-hour work stoppage today to protest an International Woodworkers of America proposal to ban the export of logs from Canada and the U.S. for six months. Thousands more dockworkers in Washington and Oregon are expected to join the protest.

Guerrilla Hunt

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Soldiers armed with machine guns patrolled the streets of Buenos Aires today, stopping cars and searching pedestrians in what government sources called "a vast governmental offensive" against guerrilla violence.

Tax Evasion $1.5M

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financier Edward Krock of Brookfield, Mass., was accused by a federal grand jury today of evading United States personal income taxes totalling almost $1.5 million, the justice department said.

Snow Batters Italy

ROME (AP) — Snowstorms battered the spine of the Italian peninsula to the south of Naples today and heavy rains touched off dozens of landslides knocking down houses and cutting the flow of several rivers.

U.S. MAY LIFT GAS CURBS

WASHINGTON (WP) — The chairman of the U.S. Federal Power Commission Tuesday proposed the elimination of federal controls over natural gas prices, a regulatory function that has been the province of the federal government since 1938.

FPC chairman John N. Nassikas' suggestion has the full support of President Nixon, who will deliver an energy message to Congress next week.

Nassikas said that deregulation would remove the price constraints he said were partly responsible for the chronic shortage of natural gas in the United States and for the lag in drilling for new natural gas that worsens the shortage. He implied that higher prices would drive many industrial customers away from gas to other fuels and would stimulate exploration for new gas.

Power Cutback

Kaiser officials said about 70 workers will be laid off today because of the shutdown. The Bonneville Power Administration was to reduce power to the Kaiser plant by 40 per cent.

The spokesman added the present power situation "makes it almost a certainty that we won't be able to open an eighth potline May 1 as scheduled. If the situation deteriorates further, additional shutdowns and further layoffs may be necesary."

QUEBEC AREA EVACUATED

PAPINEAUVILLE, Que. (CP) — A square-mile area on the outskirts of this community, 45 miles east of Ottawa, was evacuated today after a CP Rail freight train derailed and caught fire after a collision with a truck.

An early report said several crew members were feared trapped in the wreckage but a provincial police spokesman said later all were safe. One trainman suffered minor injuries and was taken to hospital at nearby Buckingham but no others were reported hurt.

Firemen from four area departments rushed to the scene to battle flames which broke out in a number of derailed oil cars and spread to a nearby home but the main concern was a derailed chlorine tanker.

Gov't Deceit Charged

Students demonstrated in the streets of Beirut against the government and the U.S. saying failure to repulse the Israeli raids made Tuesday a "day of shame."

In a statement issued in Beirut, the National and Progressive Party Front said the Lebanese government deceived the commando leadership about its defence preparations and cut the telephone lines to all commando headquarters Monday night.

The statement also said that the Lebanese government forcibly prevented commandos from pursuing the Israeli raiders as they withdrew after their assaults on commando targets in the cities of Beirut and Sidon.

The front said that Israeli subversive units were in Lebanon for some days before the raids.

The front statement said that since last September the Lebanese authorities have tightened restrictions on the Palestine commandos, "denying them the right to self-defence."

Security forces in armored cars, on foot and wielding batons dispersed 500 demonstrating students trying to reach the United States embassy today to protest Israel's surprise raid on Lebanon.

The students, who had been marching in the streets since early morning, scattered into side streets to regroup.

Scallen, right, after verdict

Scallen 'Guilty'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Scallen, president of the Minneapolis-based Medical Investment Corp. (Medicor), was found guilty Tuesday in British Columbia Supreme Court of theft of $3 million by illegally converting money belonging to Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd. to the use of Medicor.

The jury, after deliberating for 15 hours over two days, also found Scallen guilty of making a false prospectus with the intent of inducing the public to purchase shares in Northwest Sports, parent company of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League.

Sentence is to be handed down Friday by Mr. Justice Harry McKay.

Scallen, remanded in custory, appeared as if he might break down after the jurors gave their verdict.

Scallen and Lyman Walters, vice-president of Medicor and Northwest Sports, were both charged with theft and issuing a false prospectus Feb. 22, 1972, after a B.C. Securities Commission investigation.

Car Makers Get Reprieve

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) today granted the U.S. auto industry a one-year delay in meeting the 1975 anti-pollution standards.

But the agency set strict interim pollution standards and ordered the industry to equip all cars sold in California in 1975 with pollution control devices.

The industry had urged the EPA to allow it to use California, a state with a serious pollution problem, as a testing ground for its pollution control devices, known as catalytic converters.

EPA administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said he chose to phase in the pollution control devices to prevent disruption in the auto industry.

The major U.S. manufacturers — General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and American Motors — claimed in testimony before the EPA last month that they could not meet the standards. Without the one-year delay, the industry argued, it might be forced to foist an expensive and untested pollution control device on the car-buying public.

The delay means that automakers now will be required to cut carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon exhaust on 1976 model cars — instead of 1975 models — to 90 per cent below those of 1970 models.

Environmentalists said the delay was a major setback for the clean air campaign because the nation's congested cities are depending on reduced auto pollution to meet the requirements of the clean air act. If cars continue to pollute,

'Operation Nasty Deal' —The Soldier As a Cop

"I don't think it really upset people as much as the newspapers let on," said the general, presumably with an engaging shrug, and before the incident is officially marked "Closed" I want him to know that I consider it to be a totally fatuous remark.

If people weren't, in fact, upset they had every reason and right to be and every reason and right to insist that it dam'd well never happen again.

The things that went wrong last week with Operation Nasty Deal, the anti-riot training scheme of the armed forces based here, were bad enough. When civilian workmen are held at gunpoint for two hours there's cause to be not merely upset, but outraged. When soldiers carrying rifles can enter a public place and be exonerated by their commanding officer as "damned alert" (though it was, he conceded a "regrettable incident") it is a matter deeply upsetting not only to those civilians who chanced to be in that public place but to all of us who value our freedom.

But these "incidents" were simply the predictable miscalculations in a much nastier deal that has gone on too long, the creation of a military police force deliberately equipped and trained as a primary function to turn its might on a civilian population.

It was not merely "the worst waste of the taxpayers' dollar I've seen," as a corporal of 20 years service told our Pat Dufour. It was yet another demonstration of the beginnings of a Gestapo philosophy in this country that needs to be nipped in the bud.

For some 30 months, as a roving correspondent through all the nations of Latin-America, I observed armed forces whose only conceivable "enemy" was their own people and the people's aspirations to a better way of life.

In Argentina, in Brazil, in Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, wherever I travelled, I saw the gorillas in uniform who regularly went through the kind of riot drill we saw last week, but the cracked heads there were real heads, the students, the union men, the dissidents who were "controlled" were real men and women.

Now we have that same kind of force here to be used, presumably, against any faction of society deemed to be against national stability, precisely the justification for the existence of those armed services throughout South America.

The apologetic, but proud, general in charge of this local charade, Brig.-Gen. George Brown, might or might not agree with James Eayrs that a free society is constantly threatened so long as it permits the existence of such forces. Eayrs has written, "Police states are rarely founded deliberately, as are colonies or dynasties . . . they slide silently upon the scene, are acquired in a fit of absence of mind." That is one of the basic lessons of recent history.

But the general might agree, though perhaps not in public, that armed forces are more apt to assume unwittingly sinister powers in times of peace than in times of war, that when there's no enemy at the gates they're inclined to invent enemies within.

I know, myself, as an ex-serviceman, that in a time of peace there is a near hysterical effort to maintain a military establishment, the very base of rank and influence. That can be the only possible explanation now for soldiers to be assuming a domestic, internal role, the role of policemen, when God knows we've enough cops to control any foreseeable riots.

Justification is the name of the old army game, in other words, and so it was not surprising that an officer who chose to be identified only as "a service spokesman" should have provided it.

"There are some who ask us what earthly reason there could be for an exercise like this," he is quoted. "The same question might have been asked a few years ago in Eastern Canada — but then came the FLQ crisis in October, 1970, and Ottawa found it had to send in soldiers to maintain the peace."

This simplistic explanation is either the worst kind of naivete or deliberately misleading. Even if you don't take the view that the invoking of the War Measures Act was a crime against the democratic tradition, the troops involved were never in anything resembling a riot situation. The arrest of hundreds of persons for their political beliefs, eight times as many as those who ever faced a charge, the pre-dawn invasion of homes, were the work of police, not military men. It is simply not the case that "Ottawa found it had to send in soldiers to maintain the peace," as this anonymous local spokesman claims.

Indeed, the so-called "FLQ crisis" has been a convenient justification for the most mysterious of all our "security forces," the Security Planning and Research Group, itself with a strong military representation, which keeps a wary eye, so it is said, on subversive organizations, though what those subversive organizations are is a matter for the group's own secret operation. If what we saw last week in Operation Nasty Deal is the physical extension of that group it is another giant stride toward the police state mentality.

We're remarkably tolerant in these climes of a preposterously large military force that, really, has nothing worthwhile to do. So long as they simply play games with their rubber boats or Bailey bridges or hurl grenades out at Albert Head or sail in their handsome sloops we're not inclined to object too strenuously. But when these lads take up arms for the express purpose of turning them against civilians, when their training becomes a negation of the flexibility and responsiveness of the democratic system, it is time to become very upset, indeed.

WELFARE BUMS

Too Few of Them and Not Worth the Hassle, Says Levi

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

There probably are not enough true "welfare bums" to worry about, says Rehabilitation Minister Norman Levi.

In an interview, Levi admitted, "I'm not quite sure what people mean by welfare bum because, you know, we have people in all levels of society who try to beat the system."

But: "I have only met about a half-dozen people in my 17 years in this business (as a social worker and parole officer) that wilfully will not work."

He cautions that one must not confuse the welfare recipient who conscientiously refuses to work and those who are "socially handicapped" to the extent that they cannot work.

"You put a guy who's been on welfare two, three or four years on a job and he has no discipline, he can't stay there, and he can't achieve at the work level and he's usually the first guy to get fired or get disillusioned and walk away."

For such a person, "we've got to build up the guy's ego and his confidence and we need to do some training in that area."

Most people on welfare, Levi insists, "would prefer to work if they could work. Not if they had work, but if they were capable of working."

What about those who conscientiously refuse to work, even when work is available, and prefer to live on welfare?

There is probably not much that can be done, Levi replies.

"I met a group of people out in the Sooke area who are doing a recreation thing who do not want to work," Levi recalls.

"They are on welfare and say we should continue to pay them. We are continuing to pay them.

". . . I think there's three of them, that's all. I have hopes that one of them, at least, will get back into the stream.

"But if not, I guess we are not going to get into a great hassle for there are people who have dropped out, who don't identify with the society and, I think, as long as they don't become too numerous, they are just going to give the money and ride the thing out."

Levi points out "there's a lot of hassling in getting somebody to work. You have to cut them off welfare, put them on, you say if you don't work we're going to put you on vouchers. And you have all this system where he comes back every second day and he ties up staff.

"It becomes very costly and it doesn't achieve anything.

"But I don't, of course, subscribe to the idea of a welfare bum. I don't think that it is a phenomena that we have to concern ourselves too much with."

Levi says he personally subscribes to the belief that "people should make a contribution." He believes also that the public is not prepared to accept the concept that a certain segment of the community need not work and can live off the collective wealth of community indefinitely.

"You know, the taxpayer is not that ready for that kind of thing," he says.

"After all, the thing that overrides most of the problems in respect to (complete rejection of work) — and it's a phenomena of the young — is the whole drug problem.

"Older people, my age people and older get up tight because these people are dropping out and you hear a lot of people say: 'What the hell are they dropping out from? They never had it so good.'

Still, there is a welfare "burden" that must be assumed by the community.

"I think we have to accept that we have some people who are never going to function at 100 per cent. They are too damaged. . . "

"For instance, in the single man (category) which is our largest single unit, we estimate that between 60 and 70 per cent of them are not employable for medical reasons — medical-social reasons, alcohol and drug addiction, serious physical problems which have been accumulated over the years and neglected.

"Then we have the socially disabled. Those are the people who have always been unable to compete — inadequate untrained — these kinds of people.

Bawlf Rejects Denny Claim

Ald. Sam Bawlf says downtown businessmen are "out of touch" in pushing for denser zoning to allow big office blocks downtown.

The 28-year-old Victoria city planning chairman challenged store owner Tom Denny's claim that current zoning was too low in density for economic use of high-price city land.

Land is priced according to what a developer can put on it, and $12.50 to $15 (Denny's stated price of downtown land per square foot) is the prevalent price for adequate recovery of costs under current zoning, Bawlf said.

Bawlf rejected Denny's suggestion that prestige office developments had been discouraged by current zoning.

"The reason the Royal Bank did not build at Fort and Douglas is that they paid far in excess of what (Denny's) downtown land costs."

"We're looking at densities of eight-to-one in Vancouver (floor space to land area ratio) and anyone who wants what Vancouver's had should move there," Bawlf said. "Vancouver now is taking a painful look at down-zoning."

"We've got potential for four million square feet of office space in downtown Victoria. The new Bank of Commerce building (on Douglas) had a lot of trouble filling up a total of 200,000 square feet," Bawlf said.

"It's folly to concentrate all new development in one new tower and sap development from the rest of town. It's much wiser to distribute it across the main axis routes."

"As for the claim that low-density zoning will result in a future council suddenly taking the brakes off and causing sudden overgrowth — that's exactly what the downtown business advisory committee is suggesting," Bawlf said.

He also confirmed that a traffic-free mall on Government, of which he has been a major proponent, has been scrapped. Instead traffic will go one way down two lanes between widened promenade sidewalks.

Bawlf said traffic studies had shown a pedestrian mall is just not feasible. The studies cost $9,000.

City Firms Awarded Gov't Contracts

Contracts totalling more than $122,000 have been awarded to two Greater Victoria firms for work on provincial government buildings, Public Works Minister Bill Hartley announced today.

Dalziel Construction Ltd., 6111 Central Saanich Road, will undertake $68,797 worth of renovations to the cafeteria at 617 Government and Cana Construction Ltd., 1321 Gladstone Avenue, has received a $53,438 contract for general alteration work to the finance building at 612 Government.

Pay Hike Urged For Council

Mayor Peter Pollen will recommend a pay inerease for city aldermen at council's regular meeting 2 p.m. Thursday.

Exact mount of the increase was not immediately available.

Also to be discussed at the meeting is a contract proposal for the city's 250 inside workers amounting to 21.55 per cent over two years to December, 1974.

The contract proposal is expected to be approved at a meeting tonight of members of Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 388.

Other business at the council meeting will be discussion of an "Inner Harbor Special Precinct" bylaw which will change the current commercial zoning to a strictly-controlled marine-oriented special area.

The fate of a Heritage House in the 1,000-block Yates Street owned by Peter Rapanos, who wants to sell the house site as an apartment package, will also be discused.

Release of council business in today's paper is a new development recently authorized by the city administration at the instigation of the Times.

Erickson's Harbor 'Mickey Mouse'

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Two long-time Victorians today described Vancouver architect Arthur Erickson's plans for the Inner Harbor as impractical and "Mickey Mouse," resulting from ignorance of local conditions.

Bud Simms, operator of the tourist water taxis in the harbor, and timber broker Ian Sherwin, who was born in James Bay, both say that Erickson's concept of a causeway and bridge across the harbor, an open-air theatre where the Black Ball ferry now stands and a marina on the Ocean Cement site will fail.

Both say that Erickson hasn't taken into consideration that the prevailing winds come from the southwest, making all three projects impractical.

Simms recalls, "We had an open-air theatre back in the '50s and although it was on the sheltered side (Belleville) it still was a failure because of the wind. People sat on bleachers where the Welcome to Victoria sign is now and watched the show, which was staged on a scow in the harbor."

They both criticize the concept as detracting away from the real appeal of Victoria as a working harbor.

Sherwin says, "The plans as described, with little bridges and fountains (Erickson suggests a fountain in the area of the harbor cut off by the causeway and bridge running in a straight line from the Ocean Cement site to the Wax Museum) sound first class for a shopping centre but they smack of Disneyland."

In Simms' opinion the plans could also produce hazards:

"You know how rough it gets," he says. "The CPR boats have had to have tugs to manouvre them. A marina at Ocean Cement would be dangerous because lots of pleasure boats are small and couldn't take the pounding."

He agrees with Mayor Peter Pollen's suggestion that the Ocean Cement site should be used for commercial fishboats:

Erickson has suggested that the bridge on the proposed pedestrian causeway could be raised to allow small pleasure boats to go through.

Sherwin asks, "What about all the yachts that come in for Swiftsure?"

Simms suggests it could also be expensive:

"You'd have to have a man posted there 24 hours a day."

Victorians and tourists alike have used Simms' water taxis to get their first impressions of the Victoria harbor. Simms says it's the tugs, commercial fishboats and the every-day routine of the harbor that appeals to them most.

"as far as I'm concerned," see the harbor at work, including the pulp mills, rather than the scenic Gorge waters. When we reach there all they want to know is how much the houses cost.

"Even Max Lohbrunner's old whaler, after she sank, was a tourist attraction. Thousands of pictures were taken of her,"

Simms said if city engineer Jim Garnett and his staff had played a more prominent role in the Erickson plan, a lot of what he considers bad mistakes could have been avoided.

Affirming that the working aspect of the Inner Harbor should be retained as much as possible, Sherwin says:

"Victoria has a famous sailing history. Proud ships like the Thermopylae and the Sea Wolf sailed out of here. the harbor is the real thing, not a phoney.

"The emphasis should be on maritime, not Mickey Mouse."

Lit Up, Let Down

A 23-year-old hitch-hiker was picked up on Esquimalt Road Tuesday — and let down with a $75 fine in provincial court today.

Ross Charles Ogilvie, 1373 Lyall, stopped to light his hashpipe while waiting for a lift. A private car stopped. Ogilvie got in. When his driver asked what he smoked in his pipe he told the man it was hashish.

His driver then gave him the bad news — he was a drug squad officer — and drove him to Esquimalt police headquarters, to be charged with possession of hashish.

King Urged To Settle TAS Strike

Labor Minister Bill King will be asked to try to bring both sides together in the three-month strike of 20 women against Telephone Answering Service (Victoria) Limited, 727 Johnson.

Jim McAvoy, business agent for Local 230 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said there have been no meetings with management.

The answering service has continued to operate by hiring replacements for the women who went on strike Jan. 19 for a new contract.

McAvoy said the longer the strike goes on, the more "danger" there is of it becoming a long strike like the one at Sandringham Private Hospital, which began Sept. 30, 1970.

Probation for Manager

Judge Moved by Witness

Ex-Coronet theatre manager Frank Sannor today was given a six-month probationary term in provincial court after a mayor and a retired clothing retailer appeared as character witnesses.

Sannor was convicted March 23 of presenting an immoral performance, the Swedish film, Wild Honey, when he was theatre manager at the Coronet last August.

Saanich mayor and MLA for Saanich-The Islands, Hugh Curtis, told the court he and Sannor had been business acquaintances for five years and had found the man to be "a quiet, conscientious citizen."

But it was Karel de Roo retired clothing retailer who moved the court with his charcter testimony for Sannor.

In passionate tones, de Roo described the ex-theatre manager as a man who lives alone, and whose weight and equilibrium had been "badly hurt" by the trial proceedings.

"You are a most persuasive advocate," said Judge William Ostler.

Sannor's defence counsel, Dermod Owen-Flood had asked for an absolute or conditional discharge for the theatre manager, on the grounds that he had been "a pawn" in the film showing.

Ostler pointed out what he called "an exquisite inconsistency" in the defence's approach to the case. Owen-Flood has already filed notice of appeal against the March 23 conviction.

"If you get a discharge, there will be no conviction to appeal," said Ostler.

Owen-Flood argued that the appeal against the judgment and the request for a discharge were separate affairs.

The judge, noting that the accused intended to "challenge the adverse conviction" of March 23, decided in favor of a suspended sentence, at the suggestion of the Crown.

Appeal date against the conviction has not yet been set in county court.

Q. Please tell me why gold mines in Canada sell their gold to the government at $48 per ounce when the open market price is hovering around $90? Just how much actual gold backing is there behind the Canadian dollar? W. E. B.

A. For an answer to your question about the price paid for gold by the federal government, please write to The Master, The Royal Canadian Mint, Sussex Street, Ottawa, Ont.

The agent for the Bank of Canada in Vancouver says the bank, which has the sole right to issue notes for circulation, does not hold gold against the dollar.

Section 21 (1) of the Bank of Canada Act states, "the bank has the sole right to issue notes intended for circulation in Canada and such notes shall be a first charge upon the assets of the bank".

The statement of assets and liabilities for the Bank of Canada for March 31, 1973, lists assets of $7,001,291,745.70. Most of these assets are securities issued and guaranteed by Canada, bonds and debentures issued by the Industrial Development Bank, and securities issued by a province, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The bank's statement lists among liabilities notes in circulation amounting to $4,529,595,473.74. The Receiver-General of Canada holds the gold backing Canadian securities.

U.K. REJECTS HANGMAN

LONDON (UPI) — The House of Commons today rejected decisively a bid to bring back hanging in Britian three years after it was abolished.

It did so by a vote of 320-178, defeating a private bill submitted by Edward Taylor, a Conservative party backbencher.

Both the government and the opposition Labor Party allowed their supporters to vote freely according to their consciences without party discipline.

But Prime Minister Edward Heath, a strong opponent of hanging, led opponents of hanging into the lobby to vote against it.

Taylor's bill called for restoration of the death penalty for murderers of policemen or prison warders while in the exercise of their duty or for murders involving explosives or firearms.

"There can be no reasonable doubt that violence and killings have increased," Taylor said. "But the real issue is not whether there has been an increase in violence but whether any connection can be established between this and the decision to abolish capital punishment."

Taylor said the purpose of the bill was "to strike terror into the hearts of criminals in possession of guns and of terrorists who contemplated murder by explosives."

But Roy Jenkins, a former Labor Party home secretary, said, "The bill would be ineffective, impracticable and wrong."

Supplies Reach Blockaded City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — A 387-vehicle convoy broke through the Communist blockade today, bringing the first supplies in 20 days to this beleaguered city.

In Vietnam, Communists launched three sharp attacks in the Mekong Delta southwest of Saigon today, and U.S. officials said that in the north the North Vietnamese had virtually annexed the region south of the demilitarized zone with a string of air defence weapons.

The supply convoy arrived in Phnom Penh shortly after the United States started an airlift of fuel into the Cambodia capital, and started speculation that their airlift will be cancelled.

The convoy carried desperately needed supplies of food, salt, lumber, cement and heavy machinery and arrived without serious incident under heavy U.S. air cover.

The Berlin-style airlift of petroleum products was announced in the midst of the biggest Communist offensive ever launched in Cambodia. The offensive now in its third month, virtually severed all major supply lines feeding the capital, causing serious shortages of many basic necessities throughout the capital.

Communist gunners along the Mekong River had delayed or halted supply convoys moving along that route despite heavy U.S. air cover.

The most serious shortages are of petroleum products and all the city's gas stations have completely depleted their stocks despite strict government rationing. The petroleum shortage has caused power supply problems and most of the capital lives in a 24-hour power blackout.

Since the capital's water supply depends upon electric pumps, many areas have been without water for nearly one week causing severe problems now that the temperature averages 95 degrees.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Defence Secretary Elliot Richardson said that the flow of Soviet and Chinese arms through North Vietnam will determine in large part how long fighting continues in Cambodia.

"I think that the key to the situation may very well lie there," Richardson said. The Russians and Chinese "could unquestionably exercise influence" over the amount of weapons that reach Cambodia through North Vietnam.

In Vietnam, a U.S. state department official said Hanoi probably will try to achieve its objectives in Indochina by political rather than military means, despite mounting ceasefire violations.

The situation at the surrounded government border ranger camp at Ton Le Chan, 50 miles north of Saigon, where Communist shellings have been an almost daily occurrence since the end of February, was reported unchanged today.

Firm Admits Subdivision Problems

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE

NORTH COWICHAN — Kingsview Properties Ltd. admitted Tuesday it should have consulted the public six months ago on its controversial housing subdivision here.

The firm also said the proposed subdivision could displace wildlife, pollute nearby well water, cause erosion and create traffic problems.

These conclusions were offered at a special briefing two days in advance of a public hearing which may decide the fate of the proposed development. Most of the company's owners were on hand.

The briefing, combined with a reception and buffet luncheon at the Quamichan Inn, was laid on for the press. A helicopter was also brought in from Victoria to give reporters a view of the 505-acre subdivision site on the north side of Tzouhalem Mountain.

One month ago, North Cowichan citizens crowded a public hearing and turned it into a noisy and almost unanimous protest against the development plans.

A land-use contract which serves as a zoning bylaw is at issue in the Kingsview controversy. The public hearing heard complaints that the contract was merely a licence to develop without interference for 10 years.

One of the contract's parts, a drawing of the 1,300-lot subdivision, was ridiculed as being a fraud because no land registry would accept it as a plan.

Dick Wright, an employee of B. White and Associates, said the plan could not be registered until the surveying pins are in place throughout the subdivision.

Coming up with a registerable plan before the survey would be "putting the cart before the horse," he said.

The bleakest report read at the briefing came from ecologist Murray Galbraith of Victoria. Assuming that new roads and roofs covering 15 per cent of the site will form surfaces impervious to rainwater, the "rate of erosion in streams may be increased."

This drainage water only makes up 1.7 per cent of the whole drainage to Lake Quamichan, but it will "contain pollutants in more variety and concentration than are presently found within the basin. At least two wells which are located at stream side and used for drinking and stock watering could be contaminated."

Galbraith said it is probable that "the only solution would be switching to the municipal supply" of water.

Galbraith noted that facilities will be designed to control pollution of this kind.

"The present best estimate is that up to a dozen deer utilize the developmnt area, with ring-necked pheasant, California quail and other

QUEBEC AREA EVACUATED

PAPINEAUVILLE, Que. (CP) — A square-mile area on the outskirts of this community, 45 miles east of Ottawa, was evacuated today after a CP Rail freight train derailed and caught fire after a collision with a truck.

An early report said several crew members were feared trapped in the wreckage but a provincial police spokesman said later all were safe. One trainman suffered minor injuries and was taken to hospital at nearby Buckingham but no others were reported hurt.

Firemen from four area departments rushed to the scene to battle flames which broke out in a number of derailed oil cars and spread to a nearby home but the main concern was a derailed chlorine tanker.

Price Board Slated

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers Affairs Minister Herb Gray told the Commons there is a need for a food prices review board, but did not specify how it would operate.

Particulars would be contained in legislation or a detailed statement, likely to be announced before the end of the month, he said.

Gray's announcement came during debate on a New Democratic Party resolution to adopt the interim report of the special Commons committee on food prices.

The 25-member all-party committee released a report last week calling for a board to review food prices. It did not say the board should be empowered to act independently, but suggested it make recommendations to Gray.

The 10 Conservatives on the committee have refused to be associated with the report and Tuesday charged it was yet another coalition effort of the Liberals and the NDP.

However, Grace MacInnis said her party will not be satisfied with a "toothless wonder" such as the now defunct prices and incomes commission.

She said the board must commend steps to ensure food prices do not increase, or even ask the government to roll back prices.

In Montreal, Steinberg's Foods Ltd., Quebec's largest food chain, dropped prices on popular steaks, roasts and ground beef an average of six cents a pound.

The move followed similar action by Marche Union Inc., which operates 23 stores.

Other food chains said they would study the situation before making reductions.

OIL SPILL AT COLWOOD

Between 4,000 to 5,000 gallons of fuel oil were spilled into the water at the armed forces' Colwood refuelling jetty at 8:15 a.m. today.

By noon today, all but about 2,000 gallons had been returned to the system through quick action on the part of the armed forces' personnel," he said.

The remainder was contained by booms and a slick-licker was being called in to clean up the spill.

Shifting Wind Switches Flood

Times News Services

Shifting winds Tuesday night brought more devastation to southwestern Ontario and Essex County.

This time flooding struck the Lake St. Clair area and the county's north shore, already badly damaged in St. Patrick's Day flooding in March.

In the U.S. an early spring storm that paralysed parts of the midwest churned across the northeast today bringing heavy snow and freezing temperatures.

Earlier this week, the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores of Essex County were devastated by howling easterly winds up to 50 miles an hour that hurled water seven feet high against homes, cottages, docks and farmlands.

Tuesday night it was the turn of lakefront property owners who live on the county's Lake St. Clair shore.

Winds from the northwest, gusting up to 25 miles an hour, whipped up five-foot waves and sent them over the shoreline and man-made barricades.

Parts of some communities on the Detroit River and Lake Erie shores were still under water late Tuesday in the aftermath of a wild storm Monday.

In the U.S., freeze or frost warnings were extended from Missouri and Illinois into the Ohio Valley and to the states along the Gulf of Mexico. Only Florida was expected to be spared. Birmingham, Ala., reported a record April 10 low of 31 degrees.

Heavy-snow warnings were posted for parts of Maine, where five inches already have hit Rumford. Greenville and Houlton had four inches.

Scallen, right, after verdict

Scallen 'Guilty'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Scallen, president of the Minneapolis-based Medical Investment Corp. (Medicor), was found guilty Tuesday in British Columbia Supreme Court of theft of $3 million by illegally converting money belonging to Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd. to the use of Medicor.

The jury, after deliberating for 15 hours over two days, also found Scallen guilty of making a false prospectus with the intent of inducing the public to purchase shares in Northwest Sports, parent company of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League.

Sentence is to be handed down Friday by Mr. Justice Harry McKay.

Scallen, remanded in custory, appeared as if he might break down after the jurors gave their verdict.

Scallen and Lyman Walters, vice-president of Medicor and Northwest Sports, were both charged with theft and issuing a false prospectus Feb. 22, 1972, after a B.C. Securities Commission investigation.

U.S. MAY LIFT GAS CURBS

WASHINGTON (WP) — The chairman of the U.S. Federal Power Commission Tuesday proposed the elimination of federal controls over natural gas prices, a regulatory function that has been the province of the federal government since 1938.

FPC chairman John N. Nassikas' suggestion has the full support of President Nixon, who will deliver an energy message to Congress next week.

Nassikas said that deregulation would remove the price constraints he said were partly responsible for the chronic shortage of natural gas in the United States and for the lag in drilling for new natural gas that worsens the shortage. He implied that higher prices would drive many industrial customers away from gas to other fuels and would stimulate exploration for new gas.

Power Cutback

Kaiser officials said about 70 workers will be laid off today because of the shutdown. The Bonneville Power Administration was to reduce power to the Kaiser plant by 40 per cent.

The spokesman added the present power situation "makes it almost a certainty that we won't be able to open an eighth potline May 1 as scheduled. If the situation deteriorates further, additional shutdowns and further layoffs may be necesary."

Gov't Deceit Charged

Students demonstrated in the streets of Beirut against the government and the U.S. saying failure to repulse the Israeli raids made Tuesday a "day of shame."

In a statement issued in Beirut, the National and Progressive Party Front said the Lebanese government deceived the commando leadership about its defence preparations and cut the telephone lines to all commando headquarters Monday night.

The statement also said that the Lebanese government forcibly prevented commandos from pursuing the Israeli raiders as they withdrew after their assaults on commando targets in the cities of Beirut and Sidon.

Car Makers Get Reprieve

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) today granted the U.S. auto industry a one-year delay in meeting the 1975 anti-pollution standards.

But the agency set strict interim pollution standards and ordered the industry to equip all cars sold in California in 1975 with pollution control devices.

The industry had urged the EPA to allow it to use California, a state with a serious pollution problem, as a testing ground for its pollution control devices, known as catalytic converters.

—EPA administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said he chose to phase in the pollution control devices to prevent disruption in the auto industry.

The major U.S. manufacturers — General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and American Motors — claimed in testimony before the EPA last month that they could not meet the standards. Without the one-year delay, the industry argued, it might be forced to foist an expensive and untested pollution control device on the car-buying public.

The delay means that automakers now will be required to cut carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon exhaust on 1976 model cars — instead of 1975 models — to 90 per cent below those of 1970 models.

Environmentalists said the delay was a major setback for the clean air campaign because the nation's congested cities are depending on reduced auto pollution to meet the requirements of the clean air act. If cars continue to pollute,
